

SAGE'S RAGE FOR WEALTH.

He Has Been Seen in Wall Street for the Last Time.

New York, May 15.—Russell Sage, the dean of Wall street, is out of the race for millions forever. He is resting at last.

For forty-three years Russell Sage attended to his business in Wall street with unshaken regularity, and frowned upon the idea of a vacation. But now he has quit work, when his strength is gradually ebbing away, and the fire of his mind has burned down to a dull ember. He will be 90 in August, and his sole interest is in remaining alive; but he prefers to give out the impression that he is taking a vacation for the first time.

Mr. Sage was asked at his home to briefly express his views upon the secret of his long life of activity.

"I would say," said he, in a trembling voice, "that the secret of long life and a life worth living is lots of work, simple food and all the sleep your work deserves. Exercise is good when it doesn't interfere with work, and I have always found that work is the best exercise."

Mr. Sage sat in a large armchair, proud in the gaiety of a new linen duster. It had been bought at the same place and for the same price that he has bought his other linen dusters during the last quarter of a century. These little purchases have now become events of his life according to Mrs. Sage, for he has put his great interests behind him.

He speaks with great difficulty, and it requires considerable effort to interest him in a given topic of conversation, but he was asked what he thought of recent exposures in high financial circles. He chuckled, and the wrinkles of his face gathered into a tight net.

A CONFESSION.

"I have had no experience in high finance," he said. "Then, as if the subject was distasteful to him, he wandered off to a new carriage which he was going to try out on the first pleasant day."

The interviewer ventured the flattering opinion that Mr. Sage was looking vigorous for a man who had seen such a long and active life. This seemed to please him greatly.

"Ah, yes," he said. "I am well. Very well for an old man. I have always worked hard, but you see I have taken care of myself. You see what it means for a man to be careful of his mind and body."

"My business is not so pressing as it used to be, and so now I am taking a rest," and chuckled again. "I am having a vacation." Then he rambling off into something about his horses.

HE LIKED HORSES.

Probably the one luxury which Mr. Sage has not kept close-hauled in outlay is in the matter of horses.

Though he is now no longer able to drive himself, whenever the weather is pleasant he takes long drives through Central Park and along Riverside drive. He never allowed himself this luxury during the business hours of the day until very recently.

Mr. Sage has undergone a great physical change within the last year. The stern lines in his face have relaxed, and he smiles a great deal. He is apparently contented in his old age. Always erect, the aged financier carries the burden of his years with no great stoop to his shoulders.

He sleeps a great deal, and often will remain in bed two days at a stretch, claiming that he is going to get a good sleep if it takes a week to finish it.

WORK AND DIET.

For nearly sixty years Russell Sage's business day was rarely shorter than nine hours. His diet has been extremely frugal. He still jokes about his fondness for what people call "pap"—mush and milk, or crackers and milk. He does not know dyspepsia or indigestion.

Mrs. Sage said that he has become subject to colds, and this is the chief danger guarded against.

Russell Sage is liberally provided with heirs of the collateral branch, and should he die without making a will there will be thirty nephews and nieces to divide his wealth. For years he has joked about the small army of relatives who are concerned about his general health, sending him on his birthdays tokens of their love, and never failing to remember him at other gift-loving festivals.

LETTER FROM MAN WHO SAW CHRIST.

Wonderful Document of Officer of Pilate's Court to Ceaser Found.

Berlin, May 15.—A sensation has been caused in ecclesiastical circles by the publication of what is believed to be the most interesting and important historical document describing the personality of Jesus Christ. It is a letter written to the Roman Emperor by an officer of Pontius Pilate's court, and has been discovered in the library of the Lazarist Fathers in Rome.

Christian churchmen have set to work to prove the authenticity of the writing. Its great value lies upon the fact that it contains testimony as to the miracles attributed to Christ.

The letter purports to have been written soon after Jesus had begun to preach in Judea. Its text follows: "I have heard of the great things desired, some information regarding this virtuous man called Jesus, the Christ, whom the people consider a prophet and his disciples regard as the Son of God, Creator of heaven and earth."

"HE MAKES THE DEAD RISE." "It is a fact that every day one hears wonderful things told of him. To be brief, He makes the dead rise and He heals the sick."

"He is a man of medium size, whose appearance indicates both a lightness and such an amount of dignity that one feels in looking at him, that he must love him, and at the same time fear him."

"His hair, down to his ears, is of the color of a ripe walnut and hangs down on his shoulders as a light blonde and clear mass; it is parted in the middle, according to the fashion of the Nazarenes. His beard, of the same color as his hair, is curly, and although not very long, is parted in the middle, like his hair."

"His eyes are rather severe and shine like the sun; it is impossible for anyone to look him long in the face."

"When he scolds he inspires fear, but very soon he himself begins to shed tears. Even in his most severe moods he is affable and benevolent. It is said that no one has ever seen him laugh, and that he sheds tears very often."

"Every one finds that his conversation is agreeable and attractive. He is not seen very often in public, and, when he appears, he carries himself modestly."

"His manners are very distinguished; he is indeed beautiful. It is perhaps because his mother is the best looking woman ever seen in these parts."

"If you wish to see him, O Caesar as you wrote me once, let me know and I will send him to you."

"Although he has never pursued any studies he is well up in every branch of knowledge."

"He goes around barefooted and without headcover."

"Many people make fun of him when they see him coming, but as soon as they are in his presence they tremble and admire him."

"The Hebrews say that they have never seen a man like him, nor heard teachings like those he imparts."

"Many think that he is a god and others that he is the true enemy, O Caesar."

"These haughty Jews give me much trouble. They say he has never given trouble to anybody, but that, on the contrary, he tries to make every one happy."

They were to guarantee such men 18s. a week the loss under the guarantee would be but small, while they would have the satisfaction of knowing that they were doing good.

Mr. E. O. Pope, the secretary of the Wimbledon Park Club, points out that the St. Andrews term of 1s. 6d. a round are 50 per cent. above the terms usually paid in London golf clubs, and I do not think that members would agree to raise the charge of a round from 1s. to 1s. 6d. even with the object of assisting the deserving unemployed. The guarantee of 18s. a week suggested would mean a loss of not less than 10 a week per caddy to the club which adopted the idea, and I am sure that the committees of London golf clubs already overburdened with rent and rates, would find themselves unable to view with equanimity any such permanent addition to their working expenses."

Mr. Pope adds that "if it were possible round London it would certainly be more desirable to have none but boy caddies. It is impossible, because the supply does not meet the demand. Men caddies, thought occasionally excellent, are on the whole greatly pushed out of the calling tends to develop in them laziness, self-interest, and unpunctuality, not to mention other more serious vices."

The secretary of another leading Surrey club points out that his committee have already recognized "that the employment of young boys as caddies is simply creating loafers, for when they have once taken to caddying only a very small proportion in my experience, ever settle down to steady and serious work afterwards."

"Recognizing this, we are not taking any more boys, but as vacancies occur we are going to draft in men who are out of employment on account of age or some physical incapacity, but we have not tried this sufficiently long enough to know whether it is going to be a success, though so far, it does not look too promising."

THE ARCH FIEND OF THE AGE.

No war, more deadly than ever this modern butchery—but Catarrh which leads to consumption and annually kills more than famine and war combined. The doctors now successfully fight Catarrh with a remedy that never fails—"Catarrhoxone," it's death to every type of Catarrh. It destroys every root and branch of the disease so thoroughly that a relapse need never be feared. If troubled with roils, nasal or throat catarrh, or subject to bronchitis or asthma, use Catarrhoxone and you'll be cured forever.

THE HONORABLE JUDGES.

The discovery of Senator Miller that judges of the superior courts of Canada are not entitled to the term of honorable, will not, we earnestly trust, lead to any diminution in the anxiety of able and judiciously minded lawyers to serve their country in that capacity, nor in the respect and wholesome fear entertained for the courts by persons of confirmed dishonorable and criminal inclinations. In a country where the handle of Honorable is applied (wrongly) to anyone who by the accidents of politics has happened at some remote date to be a minister without portfolio for a few weeks in a province with annual budgets smaller than that of a first class city, it is difficult to conceive of a body of thoughtful and large minded men spending much energy on the effort to shate it.

Senator Scott's theory of the distribution of titles of honor of this kind appears to be based on usage. Even if Canadian history went sufficiently far back to give our usages the sanction of immemorial antiquity it may be questioned whether such a basis for dignity-granting would be as desirable as that of a definite code and therefore, without prejudice to the legal questions involved, which may be too profound for our ken, we confess to a preference for the theory supported by our one great constitutional authority, Bournout, that titles of honor in Canada derive from a single source, the Colonial Office despatches of 1868.

If the higher judges are particularly desirous of retaining officially the title which will doubtless continue to be given them by public usage (much as that of Colonel is given to every citizen of substance in Kentucky, and that of doctor to every one of parts in certain religious denominations) it should surely be possible to solve them by means of a third despatch, drawn up by Mr. Winston Churchill.

Meanwhile we have fortunately no doubt that they are honorable, with a small letter, even if not with a capital—Montreal Herald.

DROPPED ALL OTHERS.

"I dropped all liniments but Nerviline because I found Nerviline the quickest to relieve pain," writes E. S. Benton of St. John's. "If my children are croupy or sick, Nerviline cures them. If a case of cramps or stomach ache turns up, Nerviline is ever ready. We use Nerviline for Neuralgia, rheumatism and all kinds of aches and pains; it's as good as any doctor." The great Canadian remedy for the past fifty years has been Polson's Nerviline—nothing better made.

THE HERALDS FASHION PLATE.

A NEW MODEL.

The vogue of the separate skirt for wear with dainty lingerie or neatly tailored waists has led to a marked demand for separate coats, one of the popular models of which is that of the illustration. The material is a tan cloth cut on the smartest of lines back and fronts suggesting rather than fitting the figure. There is no centre back seam, those from the shoulder serving to give better lines to the figure in the back as well as the front. The collar is of tan silk, stitched flat to the coat, the same stitching repeated on the coat edges, um side, with loops of fine soutache braid, make the closing, smaller buttons set on the back of the sleeve of which is set a narrow strip of light-weight haircloth. The lining silk is in a lighter shade of tan. With this coat is worked a jaunty little sailor of tan honeycomb braid, trimmed with blue bachelor buttons.

CANCER DEATH RATE.

New York, May 1.—The popular notion that New York and other great cities are becoming more and more the home of cancer, because they offer certain conditions of life peculiarly favorable to the development of that dread disease, is overturned by a discovery just announced by Prof. Guthrie McConnell.

Dr. McConnell bases his findings, he says, on an elaborate study of the latest government statistics, covering every case of cancer in every part of the United States for a term of years.

It is now clear, he says, that while cancer is undoubtedly rapidly on the increase the growth and the mortality are far higher in the rural districts than in the cities. Persons employed in hard out-of-door labor seem more liable to the disease than those following sedentary occupations. It is markedly prevalent in well watered, well timbered regions like the Pacific Northwest.

Furthermore, Prof. McConnell says the liability to cancer is greater among foreign born whites than it is among native Americans, but the death is only apparently greater among the former here than in their native lands.

Women are more subject to cancer than men. In fact, a woman is about twice as likely to have cancer as a man. Cancer mortality is highest after the sixty-fifth year of life, and after the forty-fourth year is greater among unmarried of both sexes than the married. The general average age of death from cancer is fifty-eight years.

"Yes; I believe I did say you were always lying about yourself."

"I'll have you to understand, sir, that I am not used to this kind of talk. I'm a gentleman, sir."

"There you go. Can't keep from it, can you?"

"I've heard it said, doctor," remarked Miss Jenks, "that a good big dose of salt water will often cure seasickness."

"That's possible," replied Dr. Wise.

"Indeed?"

"Yes, if the quantity of salt water is sufficient to drown you."
