THE DRIFT OF FATE.

When the meal was finished we adjourned to the verandah and filled our pipes. The evening was delightfully cool after the heat of the day, and overhead the stars twinkled in the firmament of heaven like countless lamps, lighting up the sombre veldt till we could see the shadowy outline of trees miles away. The evening breeze rustled the long grass, and across the square the figure of our cook could just be seen, outlined against the rudy glow of the fire behind him in the hut. How happy I was I must leave you to guess. From where I sat I could catch a glimpse of my darling's face, and see the gleam of her rings as her hand rested on the arm of the chair. The memory of the awful time that we had spent together on the island, and in the open boat, came back to me with a feeling that was half pleasure, half pain. When I realized that I was entertaining them in my abode in Rhodesia, it seemed hardly possible that we could be the same people.

Towards the end of the evening Mr. Maybourne made an excuse and went into the house, leaving us alone together. Mackinnon had long since departed. When we were alone, Agnes leant a little forward in her chair and said:

"Are you glad to see me, Gilbert?"

"More pleased than I can tell you," I answered, truthfully. "But you must not ask me if I think that you were wise to come."

"I can see that you think that I was not," she continued. "But how little you understand my motives. I could not ——"

Thinking that perhaps she had said too much, she checked herself suddenly, and for a little time we did not speak again. When she did it was only about the lonliness of my life on the mine, and such like trivial matters. Illogical as men are, though, I had hoped, for both our sakes, that she would not venture again on such delicate ground as we had traversed before we said good-bye, I could not help a little sensation of disappointment when she acted up to my advice. I was still more piqued when a little later she stated that she felt tired, and, holding out her hand, bade me good-night, and went to her room.

Here I can only give utterance to a remark, which, I am told, is as old as the hills—and that is, how little we men understand the opposite sex. From that night forward, for the first three or four days of her visit, Agnes' manner towards me was as friendly as of old, but I noticed that she made but small difference between her treatment of Mackinnon and the way in which she behaved towards myself. This was more than I could bear and, in consequence my own behavoir towards her changed. I found myself bringing every bit of ingenuity I possessed to bear on an attempt to win her back to the old state. But it was in vain! Whenever I found an opportunity and hinted at my love for her, she invariably changed the conversation into such a channel that all my plans were fustrated. In consequence, I exerted myself the more to please, until my passion must have been apparent to everyone anout the place. Prudence, honor, everything that separated me from her was likely to be thrown to the winds, my infatuation for Agnes Maybourne ha! grown to such a pitch that without her I felt that I could not go on living.

One day, a little more than a week after their arrival, it was my good fortune to accompany her on a riding excursion to a waterfall in the hills, distant some seven or eight miles from the mine. On the way she rallied me playfully on what she called my "unusual qdietness." This was more than I could stand and I determined, as soon as I could find a convenient opportunity, to test my fate and have the matter settled for good and all.

On reaching our destination, we tied the horses by the reins to a tree at the foot of the hill, and climbed up to the hills we had ridden over to explore. After the first impression, created by the wild grandeur of the scene, had passed, I endeavored to make the opportunity that I wanted.

"How straogely little circumstances recall the past. What place does that remind you of?" I asked, pointing to the rocky hill on the other side of the fall.

"Of a good many," she answered, a little artfully, I-m afraid, "I cannot say that it reminds me more of one than of another. All things considered, there is a great sameness in South African scenery."

Cleverly as she attempted to turn my question off, I was not to be balked in that manner so easily.

"Though the likeness has evidently not impressed you, it reminds me very much of Salvage Island," I said, drawing a step closer to her side. "Half way up that hill one might well expect to find the plateau and the cave."

"Oh, why do you speak of that awful cave," she said with a shunder "Though I try to forget it it always give me a nightmare."

"I am sorry that I recalled it to your memory, then," I answered, "I think that in spite of the way that you have behaved towards me lately, Agnes, you are aware that I would not give you pain for anything. Do you know that?"

As I put this question to her I looked her in the face.

She dropued her head and answered:

"Yes."

Emboldened by my success, I resolved to push my fate further.

"Agnes," I said, "I have been thinking over what I am going to say to you now for some time past, and I believe that I am doing right. I want to tell you the story of my life, and then to ask you a question that will decide the rest of it. I want you to listen and then, when I am done, answer me from the bottom of your heart. Whatever you say I will abide by."

She looked up at me with a startled expression on her face.

"I will listen," she said, "and whatever answer you ask I will give. But think first, Gilbert; do you really want me to know your story?"

"God knows that I have as good reasons for wishing to tell it to you as any man can have," I answeredf "I can trust you as I can trust no one else in the world. I wish you to hear and judge me. Whatever you say I will abide by it."

She put her little hand in mine, and, having done so, seated herself on a boulder, Then, after a little pause, she bade me tell her all.

"In the first place," I said, "I must make a confession that wil, surprise youf My name is not Wrexforh, as I have so long led you to suppose, but it is Pennethronef My father was Sir Anthony Pennethrone, of Polton-Penna in Cornwall. I was educated at Eton and Oxford; and, as you will now see, I got no good from either. After a college scrape, the blame of which was thrown upon me, my father turned me out of England with a portion of my inheritance. I went to Australia, where I turned my hands to all sorts of employment, gold mining among the number.

THE WINGED VICTORY.

By Bliss Carman.

Thou dear and most high Victory,
Whose home is the unvanquished sea,
Whose fluttering wind-blown garments keep
The very freshness, fold and sweep
They wore upon the galley's prow—
By what unwonted favor now
Hast thou alighted in this place,
Thou Victory of Samothrace?

O thou to whom in countless lands
With eager hearts and striving hands
Strong men in their last need have prayed,
Greatly desiring, undismayed,
Thou who hast been across the fight
Their consolation and their might—
Withhold not now one dearer grace,
Thou Victory of Samothrace!

Behold, we too must cry to thee,
Who wage our strife with Destiny,
And give for Beauty and for Truth
Our love, our valor and our youth.
Are there no honor for these things
To match the pageantries of kings?
Are we more laggard in the race
Than those who fell at Samothrace?

Not only for the bow and sword,
O Victory! be thy reward!
The hands that work with paint and clay,
In Beauty's service, shall not they
Also with mighty faith prevail?
Let hope not die, nor courage fail;
But joy come with thee pace for pace,
As once long since in Samothrace.

Grant us the skill to shape the form
And spread the color living-warm
(As they who wrought aforetime did)
Where love and wisdom shall lie hid,
In fair, impassioned types to sway
The cohorts of the world to-day,
In Truth's eternal cause, and trace
Thy glory down from Samothrace!

Oh, in the hour of our despair,
Be near us, that we still may dare,
And reach through bitter fortitude,
Thy glad, unconquerable mood!
Lift up the hearts that still must ache,
With the long striving, and remake
And strengthen them a little space,
A Victory of Samothrace!

With all the ease and splendid poise
Of one who triumphs without poise,
Wilt thou not teach us to attain
Thy sense of power without strain,
That we a little may possess,
Our souls with thy sure loveliness?—
That calm the years cannot deface,
Thou Victory of Samothrace.

Then in the ancient ceaseless war
With infamy, go thou before!
Amid the shoutings and the drums,
Let it be learned that Beauty comes,
Man's matchless paladin to be,
Whose rule shall make his spirit free
As thine from ought of mean or base,
Thou Victory of Samothrace.

"Say, papa, you was tellin' Mr. Crummage 'bout shootin' a eagle on the wing. Which wing was it?"

"You don't understand, Bobby. It was a soaring eagle I shot."

"Did it make him sore when you shot him, papa?"

"No, no, Bobbie. The eagle was up—up in the air—enjoying a long fly."

"Do eagles eat long flies, papa?"

"Jane, why don't you put the child to bed?"—Cleveland Plain-Dealer,

FORM OF INTOXICATION.

Anomaly of Present Day Christian Civilization.

Ithaca, June 20.—Dr. Philip Moxom of Springfield, Mass., preached the baccalaureate sermon at Cornell University yesterday. Dr. Moxom declared that there are times when the knowledge of the world has increased more rapidly than the power of assimilation, when the sources of material wealth have been exploited beyond the capacity of the moral nature to utilize riches for the highest ends.

"Then," he continued, "the moral sense is blunted, conscience is laid to sleep, and men become habituated to courses of action which violate the fundamental principles of Christian ethics.

"Something like this appears to have occurred in our time and we see the anomaly of a Christian civilization, honeycombed with selfishness injustice aod fraud. It is a fair judgment on us as a people that our growth in moral character has not kept pace with our material possessions. We are intoxicated with prosperity. There is a vast benevolence in the form of gifts to beneficient institutions but men give out of the very superfluity of their riches. Giving today is often a fad or a pleasant luxury disguised as virtue. Furthermore, no glamour of collossal benefactions can hide from our minds the repulsive fact that many large fortunes are secured by deliberate spoliation of the people. We are irreligious and we are immoral; we have lost faith in the future of the soul because we have wedded ourselves to the material present."

DINED AGENTS-GENERAL.

Lord Strathcona Speaks in Canada's Behalf.

London, June 20.—Lord Strathcona and the Agents-Generals of the other colonies were entertained at dinner to-night by the Salters Company. The Master proposing "The Colonies," recalled the services of Lord Strathcona in equipping Strathcona's Horse during the war. Lord Strathcona, replying, said the colonies were progressing in every direction, and Canada in a few years would be able to supply all the foodstufis needed by the United Kingdom. He alluded to the self-reliance of Natal in recent native troubles. As it was with Natal, so it would be with all the colonies, each doing what it could to advance its individual position, while having regard to the welfare and prosperity of the empire as a whole.

STRICKEN AT QUEBEC.

Ex-Auditor-General McDougall in Critical Condition.

Quebec, June 20.—Mr. James Lorne McDougall, ex-Auditor General of the Dominion of Canada, who came to Quebec in the month of March last to conduct an investigation into civic affairs, was stricken with paralysis yesterday morning in his room at the Chateau Frontenac, and is said to be in a serious condition. Mr. McDougall received the stroke just as he had risen from his couch for the day, and fortunately was able to attract assistance. Dr. Colin Sewell was sent for, but is unable to express an opinion of the state of his patient until to-morrow. Mrs. McDougall and his son, Mr. Alex McDougall, C. E., of Ottawa, were immediately notified and arrived here last night.

HIS GOOD FORTUNE.

The legacy was just a clear £1,000, and Higgins was mightily glad to the chance to handle so cozy a sum. He had undergone the usual agonizing delays of the law, and, on the whole, had borne up very well, and at last the welcome message had arrived that if he would attend at the office of Messrs. Sharp & Sharper, the solicitors, he would receive the money due.

"Of course, Mr. Higgins," said Mr. Sharp, "you will understand this matter has put us to considerable inconvenience——"

"And expense," said Sharper.

"But we have decided that, with regard to our remuneration, as we were both personally acquainted with your father and your mother," continued Sharp, "that our fees will only amount to six hundred——".

"And fifty pounds," said Sharper.

Higgins's grin faded suddenly.

"Well, gents," he said, "I s'pose I'm lucky. If you'd 'a known my grandparents you'd have stuck to the lot. Thank goodness, they was careful of their company!"—Answers.

A southern Judge tells of the disqualification of a juryman who came before him. The case was a capital one, and the lanky backwoodsman declared determined opposition to capital punishment. Looking at him sternly and in tones somewhat suggestive of wrath, the judge asked the fellow if he did not think there were conditions so extraordinary as to warrant the hanging of the offender. He said he did not believe anything could make him assent to such a verdict.

"But will your Honor let me explain?" said the disqualified citizen. "I'd like to give the court my reasons."

"I don't wish to hear any explanation from you. Go and sit down."

"Excuse me, Judge, but you must hear my reason."

"Well, then, give it, and go along with you."

"The reason I am opposed to capital punishment, your Honor, is that my mammy taught me it were a sin to kill anything that wasn't fitten to eat."—New York Tribune.

STUDY IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Young Ladies and Boys Arrived From Cuba En Route to Memramcook.

There arrived in St. John on the steamer Calvin Austin recently Francisco Lorado, his four daughters and one son, and four other lads from Havana, Cuba. They were en route to Memramcook, where the young ladies and boys are to study at the Sisters' convent and St. Joseph's College.

Rev. Father Cormier, of St. Joseph's came to St. John to meet them and all left for Memramcook. One of the boys had been for a year at the college, and had progressed admirably in the study of English, but none of the other boys or women can speak any language but Spanish, and that is the reason why they came at the close of the term.

They will take up residence with families near the institutions, and by the time the fall term opens will have secured the foundation for their study of our language and will be able to join in the class studies of the next term. The two elder of the young ladies have finished their general education at home, and one is an accomplished musician while the other is a clever artist.

M. Lorado is of an importing firm having branches at Havana, New York, Matanzas, Sagua and Cardenas. He will spend three weeks at Memramcook.

VERY SUDDEN DEATH.

Woodstock, June 20—One of Woodstock's brightest and most popular young ladies, Miss Mabel Vanwart, aged 20, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Vanwart, instantly died in a carried yesterday afternoon while driving with a gentleman friend.

Miss Vanwart has not been well for three months, suffering from lung trouble, but for a few weeks past she has been able to drive out with relatives and friends. As usual, she was driving yesterday when the final summons came. Beside her parents, deceased is survived by a sister, Miss Ethel, and four brothers, Alexander, Judson, Bruce and Ernest.

The marriage of J. S. Nickerson, the well known I. C. R. conductor, to Miss Edith Coates, daughter of the late Mr. John Coates, took place Tuesday evening at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. E. A. Fryers, at Moncton. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. W. McConnell, pastor of the Central Methodist church, in the presence of a few immediate friends.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux and R. L. Borden Tuesday night addressed the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, now in convention at Ottawa.

A WOMAN'S BACK IS THE MAINSPRING OF HER PHYSICAL SYSTEM. The Slightest Backache, if Neglected, is Liable to Cause Years of Terrible Suffering.

No woman can be strong and healthy unless the kidneys are well, and regular in their action. When the kidneys are ill, the whole body is ill, for the poisons which the kidneys ought to have filtered out of the blood are left in the system.

The female constitution is naturally more subject to kidney disease than a man's; and what is more, a women's work is never done—her whole life is one continuous strain.

How many women have you heard say: "My, how my back aches!" Do you know that backache is one of the first signs of kidney trouble? It is, and should be attended to immediately. Other symptoms are frequent thirst, scanty, thick, cloudy or highly colored urine, burning sensation when urinating, frequent urination, puffing under the eyes, swelling of the feet and ankles, floating specks before the eyes, etc.

These symptoms if not taken in time and cured at once, will cause years of terrible kidney suffering. All these symptoms, and in fact, these diseases may be cured by the use of

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

They act directly on the kidneys, and make them strong and healthy.

Mrs. Mary Galley, Auburn, N.S., writes: "For over four months I was troubled with a lame back and was unable to turn in bed without help. I was induced by a friend to try Doan's Kidney Pills. After using two-thirds of a box my back was as well as ever."

Price 50 cents per box or three boxes for $1.25 at all dealers or sent direct on receipt of price. The Doan Kidney Pill Co., Toronto, Ont.
