teman at the bar at this moment. You shall make your defence only within certain lines?"

"After the gentleman at the bar of the house had answered the question whether he was the author of this article, then it seems to me that the only question to be put on him was, What reasons had you for writing the article? The character of the article is undoubtedly libellous. It is, then, it is for the gentleman who has written it to give the reasons why and wherefore he has written such an article. Then it will be for the house to decide whether the reasons he gives are sufficient or not sufficient. But I cannot conceive that the house will say, 'You shall give an answer but you shall limit it to certain things and not go beyond these.'"

Hon. Wm. Paterson read from Mr. Foster's speech where he said that there was nothing in his conduct in the house or out of it that called for such statements as Cinquars had used. That being so it was in the interests of Mr. Foster that there should be a full enquiry.

Mr. Millar (South Gray) suggested that a conference should be held between Mr. Cinquars and Mr. Foster and they might settle it. (Laughter.)

Mr. Demers (St. John and Iberville) thought they should hear what the gentleman had to say in extenuation of his case, seeing he pleaded guilty. He may think that he was doing no more than was allowed him under the liberty of the press. In that he may be mistaken, but he should get the same opportunity as was permitted him in a court of law.

The vote was then taken and Mr. Aylesworth's amendment was carried by eighty-two for to forty-eight against.

CINQUARS PLEADS JUSTIFICATION.

Mr. Cinquars then presented his case. He read it first in French and afterwards in English, and at times received applause. Summarized, his defence is as follows:

Mr. Cinquars expressed his respect for its membership, and claimed the privileges of the press, which he did not think he had gone beyond in this matter. In his conduct towards Mr. Foster he had acted, he claimed, without any personal animosity and merely in the public interest.

His political writing was in no way exceptional, so far as the ordinary tone of present day politics is concerned. One only needed to recall articles in the Ontario and Quebec press to perceive that the one to which Mr. Foster took exception was far from being as violent and inflammatory in tone. A Quebec Conservative organ unceasingly represented the prime minister as a traitor to his nationality and his religion. The Ontario papers, in their editorials and cartoons represented him as the instrument and slave of the Catholic hierarchy.

As for Mr. Foster it would be impossible to read that honorable gentleman's speeches and writings without feeling impressed by the fact that in his eyes the French-Canadians are the slaves of the bishops who represent them in ignorance. It was easy to understand what Mr. Foster meant when he compared the bishops of Quebec to the grand dukes of the autocratic Czar of Russia when he said that they controlled with their influence the prime minister and his colleague. In this connection Mr. Cinquars quoted the words that Mr. Foster used in the Northwest autonomy debate of last session comparing Sir Wilfrid to the Czar and declaring that he (the premier) consulted only the grand dukes.

Mr. Cinquars quoted, also, the terms in which he (Foster) had spoken in last session of the premier consulting with the papal legate, Mr. Sbarretti, and ignoring the views of his colleagues and of the people of the northwest in the preparation of the school clauses of these northwest autonomy bills.

QUOTES EXTRACTS FROM FOSTER.

Mr. Cinquars offered a quotation of a speech Mr. Foster made last session that he felt justified in this statement could more serious and defamatory accusations be launched against the public men and citizens of a province? These latter being thus represented as a flock of sheep set up for sale and anxious for nothing else than money and preferment.

Cinquars followed this with a few other extracts calculated, he thought to show that the picture he drew of the ex-finance minister was not too highly colored.

Again during the session of 1900 Mr. Foster had said that the defeat of Mr. Casgrain had been due to race and creed cries which were raised against him. "This language of Hon. Mr. Foster," said Mr. Cinquars at the very opening session of a new parliament, furnishes an idea of the sentiments. He accuses Mr. Parment of having won his election by race and creed cries, which are absolutely false. During the same session, Mr. Foster had spoken in his derisive style of the influence of the Catholic church on the people of Quebec, especially in regard to educational matters. Later on he was carrying on an election campaign in London and appealing to the electorate by asserting that "a vote given to Hyman was a vote for Laurier, Sbarretti and the hierarchy."

QUOTES A QUEENS COUNTY SPEECH.

Mr. Cinquars then quoted from a declaration by Samuel E. McDonald, of Queens county (N. B.), stating the Conservatives conducted their campaign with Mr. Foster as their candidate with cries against the French-Canadians. Mr. Cinquars went on: "I am informed that during the election campaign of 1896, at a public meeting held in Renfrew, Ontario, Mr. Foster pronounced the following: 'Would it not be a disgrace and a shame for this fair dominion of ours to have at the head of the government a French Canadian and a Catholic at that.'"

From these quotations and the irony contained in Mr. Foster's speeches the speaker concluded that the people of Quebec were very much detested by that gentleman.

"As a member of the Liberal party," he added, "I thought it my duty to sharply take up such utterances on the part of a public personage. I repeat that I did not make any false report of Hon. Mr. Foster's utterances. I was merely penning an appreciation of a public man. My article was a criticism of a general character and the exactness of its coloring might be a proper subject for debate, but elsewhere than here. Under the present circumstances, I submit that I in no way abused the privileges of parliament."

DUNCAN ROSS DEFENDS PRESS

Duncan Ross (Yale and Cariboo) discussed the question not only as a member of parliament but as a member of the profession, to which the young man, before the bar belonged. "I wish to take," he said, "the position at the outset recognizing my full responsibility as a member of parliament, that as a newspaper man I protest against the house of commons placing itself in the position of censoring the newspapers of this country. I say at the outset that the honorable member for North Toronto (Foster) must go back nearly 100 years in the history of the motherland before he can find a precedent for the action he has taken in connection with this case.

"I go further. I say that if any member of the imperial house of commons were to stand up in his place and take the position which the honorable member for North Toronto (Foster) has taken, he would, to use the expression of the minister of justice, be laughed out of court. Here we are going back to the days of George the Second and Wilkes when the press was persecuted.

"In regard to the Cinquars article it was particularly of the Fosterian style. He exercised to a greater extent than any other member of this House the privileges he enjoyed in the house. Foster did what he accused Cinquars of assuming responsibility. "It required no courage for an hon. member protected by the privileges of parliament to suggest that the hon. leader of the House got his instructions from Monsignor Sbarretti in connection with the education clauses of the autonomy bills last year. It required no courage for a member to assail members in this House and outside of this House without a little evidence to justify him because protected by parliament.

"Cinquars assumed responsibility for his article and the courts were open for Mr. Foster. No man shows more courage and the other none. The member for North Toronto wants a double-barrelled protection for his comments. He did that which he accused Cinquars of doing and asked parliament to protect him against the press of the country which assumed responsibility.

"The press of Great Britain," said Mr. Ross in conclusion, "fought the battles of the liberty of the press too long to justify us in allowing the parliament of a British colony in the year 1906 to practically assume a censorship of this House. I move that we now proceed to the orders of the day."

LAURIER MOVES CENSURE.

The prime minister said he felt it his duty as leader of the house, to give his views upon this question and in so doing he was sorry to have to take issue with Mr. Ross. He respected the press as much as any man and was not at all surprised that Mr. Ross defended the rights of his cause as warmly as he had.

On the other hand, while I recognize in the fullest possible way the right of the press to criticize, and while I recognize that the press should have the most ample liberty in criticizing, advocating, censuring, expressing its opinion in every possible way, at the same time I think we must maintain the doctrine that the press, like everybody else, is amenable to the jurisdiction of this parliament.

When such cases were brought before the house it always dealt with them. He had already questioned Mr. Foster's judgment in bringing it here, but since he did, parliament had to deal with it and assert its jurisdiction. In conclusion Sir Wilfrid moved the following resolution:

"That the passage in La Presse newspaper complained of passed the bounds of reasonable criticism and constitutes a breach of privileges of this house, that Mr. Cinquars, the writer of the article has incurred the censure of the house, and that he be recalled to the bar and that Mr. Speaker be instructed to communicate this resolution to him."

Mr. Borden supported the resolution.

tion, which was adopted without division.

Mr. Cinquars appeared at the bar on the motion of Sir Wilfrid. He was again received with applause, which lasted for some time. The resolution was read to Cinquars and the accused was then discharged.
