FOR LOVE OR HONOR.

The rope, being relieved of the weight of the body, of course ran rapidly through the block, and the men hauling it pitched pell-mell over themselves onto the deck. There was a moment of intense excitement. The seamen on the other side of the deck, cheering wildly, started forward. The officers, sword in hand, sprang in front of them, driving them back. The marine officers at brought his men at once to attention with a sharp word or two, and every piece was ready in case of disturbance. Pearson, white with rage at the interruption, leaped forward. "What is the meaning of this," he shouted. "Who has dared to interfere in this manner?"

"I, sir," replied Coventry, fearlessly, looking up from his place by the unconscious man. "And by what right, sir?" cried the enraged captain. "Though you be the son of the Admiral, you shall pay dearly for this unwarranted assumption of authority. What excuse have you to offer for interrupting the sentence of a court martial? What reason can you urge for that presumption?"

"Boat ahoy!" cried the seamen stationed at the port gangway. "Sir," said Coventry, calmly meeting the eye of the thoroughly infuriated captain, "if I mistake not you will find my excuse in that boat."

"Well for you, sir, if it is there! Never in my twenty years of service have I been so braved, and on my own ship, too! See what boat it is," said the captain, turning to one of the midshipmen, "and find out what is wanted."

The lad came running back presently and saluted. "Tis a lady, sir—the governor's ward—Lady Elizabeth Howard. She wishes to come on board," he said. "Lady Elizabeth Howard! This is no place for women. The man is still to be hanged. What can she wish?" exclaimed the captain, frowning.

"Receive her at once, sir, I beg," said Coventry. "She has a paper—my excuse, sir," he added, smiling.

"Show her on board," said the captain, shortly, to the midshipman. Then he looked down on the still unconscious form of O'Neill. "Send a surgeon here at once, sir," he continued, and, as the latter presented himself, "Is the man dead," he asked.

"No, sir," said the surgeon, examining him hastily and making ready to apply some necessary restoratives, for which he despatched an assistant to the sick bay.

"Get him in shape, then, and quickly, for another attempt for he shall have to be held up for it!" ordered the captain sternly. At this moment the midshipman, followed by Lady Elizabeth, came on deck, a blue boat coak which belonged to her guardian, which she had caught up in the castle, flitting in the breeze, her hat gone, her hair disheveled, her hand clutching a paper, broke through the group.

"Captain Pearson—where is he?" she cried nervously. Then, as she eyes fell on the prostrate form of O'Neill, she dropped the paper to the deck, covered her face with her hands and rocked to and fro in agony. "Oh, my love, my love, too late, too late!" she wailed, faltering.

"Not so, madam," said the captain, turning towards her. "The man still lives, the surgeon assures me. He has but fainted. Have you a warrant to stop the execution? If not it must go on, and it shall go hard with Major Coventry, as well."

"The prisoner is relieved, sir. Here is the paper, sealed and signed by the Admiral himself. Oh, I had it at a moment since! Where has it gone?"

"Here it is, your ladyship," said one of the officers, lifting it from the deck and handing it to her. "There," she said, presenting it to the captain. He opened it deliberately and glanced over the brief contents. She watched him with nervousness that she vainly attempted to conceal.

Meanwhile the doctor had succeeded in arousing O'Neill. The first look from his eyes fell on Elizabeth, and nothing else he saw. "Heaven and the angels!" he murmured faintly, not yet comprehending the position.

"It seems to be made out properly, and duly sign and sealed," said the captain slowly, "a reprieve for the prisoner until further notice, and permission for the bearer to see him alone," he added, suspiciously. There was a little pause. He turned the paper over in his hand and looked at the girl sharply.

"The Admiral chooses a strange messenger," he added. "I cannot say if this be regular or not. His handwriting is unfamiliar to me. I do not recognize this. You say that you had it from him, madam?"

Elizabeth could not trust herself to speak; she only bowed her head. There was evidently something very suspicious to the captain in the whole proceeding. The signature did not seem just right.

"Ah, I have it! Major Coventry," he cried, suddenly.

That miserable young man, sick at heart, had slunk into the background since Elizabeth had come on board, and the girl had not seen him before. He had felt that his work was done when she appeared; but, no, he was to find out that his troubles had but commenced.

"Oh!" she cried as he stepped forward, clutching him wildly by the arm, a look of terror in her eyes, as she added in a whisper, "Not yet—I had forgotten you—we are lost!"

In the bitter knowledge that she had forgotten him he overlooked the clew to her action furnished by her last words.

"Here is a reprieve from the Admiral," said the captain. "It looks to me to be correct, and yet—will you look over it and give me your opinion? You are familiar with his writing, at any rate. My lady, forgive me the questioning, but the matter is most serious, and I must be absolutely assured."

"Here is the paper, Edward," said Elizabeth, desperately, taking it from the captain's outstretched hand. "Is not that the Admiral's writing?" she added, entreatingly, and then, clasping her hands, she looked at him with all her soul in her eyes and waited, full of apprehension.

A word, and he hugged her lover, and, incidentally but surely, killed her; a word, and he set them free! What the consequences to himself his decision might be, with the sublime egotism for of love for another, she neither knew or questioned. He saw what was expected of him; his life or her happiness trembled in the balance. True to his determination, he did not hesitate a moment. In that glance of a single second he realized the truth, which he had more than suspected before.

Lord Chief Justice Coleridge was a most courteous man, but could—as Sergeant Ballantine once pithily expressed it—"say the most unpleasant things in the most pleasant manner."

In a lengthy case a well known barrister, who had gained a somewhat unenviable reputation for rudeness and rough speech, wrangled over every triviality and unimportant point, and talked so volubly that Coleridge's patience was sorely tried. At last the Chief Justice interposed with the remark: "Unfortunately for your case, Mr. F., the documentary evidence does not bear out your contention."

The learned counsel, in his usual rude and offensive tones, said: "I say it does."

"Oh, well, then, it would not be courteous of me to contradict you!" replied Coleridge, as, with a graceful inclination of the head, he sank back on his cushions.

Even Mr. F.'s brazen impudence recoiled under the sharp rapier thrust.

RAILWAY THAT PAYS.

Attorney General of N. B., Interested in a Profitable Road.

Toronto, Jan. 6—Attorney-General Pugsley was in Toronto yesterday attending a meeting of the directors of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company, of which he is vice-president.

The November statement of this railway was made public today, showing gross earnings for the month of seventy-six thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars and net earnings for the month of forty-four thousand three hundred and four dollars. The net earnings are nearly three hundred per cent greater than for the corresponding month of last year. For the five months ended November thirty last the gross earnings were three hundred and twenty thousand, nine hundred and fifteen dollars and the net earnings for the same period one hundred and forty-two thousand, six hundred and twelve dollars, or at the rate of upwards of three hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars.

Nothing shows the great development of the Canadian west more forcibly than the rapid increase in the earnings of this railway. The road runs from Regina to Prince Albert and is two hundred and fifty-three miles in length. Mr. Pugsley and his co-directors are reasonably happy over the great prosperity of their line of railway.

HAD LEG AMPUTATED.

Halifax Merchant Successfully Underwent Operation Yesterday.

Halifax Chronicle.—Mr. Jarvis Hart, one of the oldest and most successful merchants of Halifax, underwent a serious operation at his home on Pleasant Street. He had one of his legs amputated. Gangrene had developed, and the operation was necessary to save his life. It is understood that the doctors decided Mr. Hart could not live more than seventy-two hours if he did not submit to the operation, and, though eighty-seven years of age, he consented to have his leg amputated. The operation was successfully performed by Drs. Stewart and Schleyer, and the patient stood it remarkably well for a man of his years. Last evening he was resting easy, and his numerous friends will be glad to learn that every hope is held out for his ultimate recovery.

A STRONG HEART AND STEADY NERVES

Very important it is in this age of competition to have a clear cool head, a strong heart and steady nerves. Too much rush and bustle, work and worry, fall to the lot of the average business man—his heart and nerve system will not stand it—he gives them too much work to do. Women also are doing the same thing attending to their household duties and looking after their social obligations. The constant strain under which they have to continue day in and day out, the irregularities of habits and loss of rest will soon shatter the strongest system. Before long you become nervous, starting at the least sudden sound, the heart flutters and palpitates, speaks fast before the eyes, the pulse becomes weak and irregular, you have faint and dizzy spells, lack of self-confidence, rush of blood to the head, irritability of temper, shortness of breath, starting in sleep, sensation of pins and needles, sleeplessness, restlessness and finally physical breakdown or nervous prostration.

MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS

are the remedy you require to restore your strength and health. Their extraordinary curative power manifests itself immediately they are taken. Through the medium of the nervous system they impart a strengthening and restorative influence to every organ and tissue of the body. Many have been cured, among them being Mr. Ray V. Cormier, Wellington, P.E.I., Mrs. E. Kilmer, Humberstone, Ont., Mrs. C. McDonald, Portage la Prairie, Man., Mr. Walter Cleveland, Bayswater, N.S., Mrs. Owen Martin, Alma, N.B. and thousands of others.

The price of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is 50 cts. per box or 3 boxes for $1.25. Can be procured at all drug and general stores, or will be sent on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.
