McMURRAY &

LATE RUSSELL SAGE.

Rose from Grocer's Clerk to be one of the Richest Men in America.

INTERESTING SKETCH OF A REMARKABLE CAREER.

Russell Sage, of New York, who died on Sunday last, is reported to have left an estate worth from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000.

Many men can earn money, but few can hold it. Russell Sage was without the slightest doubt the most striking example of the few and in his life, full of activity and exemplifying the shrewdest business acumen, which gained for him a high place among the Croesuses of this country, means anything to posterity, it forcibly portrays a career of long and persistent labors which bore fruit at every turn.

A grocer's clerk, retail grocer, ward politician, a dabbler in railroads, a congressman, a director and adviser of gigantic enterprises, and world-famed as the financier with more ready cash than any living man. The foregoing briefly epitomizes the life of Russell Sage, who has now passed away at the age of nearly 90, which might aptly suggest that business activity was conducive to longevity.

Without ostentation, leaving "society" for others and finding his only conception of true happiness in the business world and at his hearth, he has stood out alone as a distinctive type of millionaire, yes, multi-millionaire, for it is doubtful if any one besides Russell Sage could ever tell his exact wealth.

NEW YORKER BY ACCIDENT.

By what many might term an accident of birth, Russell Sage was a native of New York, instead of Connecticut, from which place his parents were moving when he was born, and where he buried his ancestors, who represent a long and worthy line of American stock.

Verona, Oneida county, N. Y., then has the distinction of being the birth place of the great financier, August, 1816. The westward journey of the Sage family from Middleton, Ct., was stopped by the birth of Russell Sage, and the family remained at Verona, where the father took up farming, and Russell at 6 attended the district school.

At 14 he entered his brother Henry's grocery store in Troy as errand boy. Evening study and membership in the typical country debating society prepared him for the sterner business and political battles which he was later called upon to wage.

Not being contented with his errand boy job, he soon branched out with a store of his own, and later, in 1839, under the firm name of Bates & Sage, enlarged his business and became a jobber. All the firm's supplies were shipped by stage from New York and distributed through the upper counties of New York and throughout New England by wagons.

HIS TWO MARRIAGES.

In 1841 Russell Sage married Maria Winne, of Troy, who died in 1867, shortly after Mr. Sage had taken up his residence in New York city.

Two years later he married Olivia Slocum, the friend and schoolmate of the former Mrs. Sage, and she survives.

It was shortly after his first marriage that he began to take an interest in speculative railroad stocks. He was fascinated with a ride of 16 miles over the Hudson & Mohawk, running from Albany to Schenectady. In this line Thurlow Weed, Louis Benedict and a number of other influential Whig politicians were interested. He was a pronounced Whig, and as such entered the Troy board of aldermen in 1845 and after that became chairman of the Rensselaer congressional district committee, which place he held for over twenty years.

He was a congressman from 1852 to 1857 and refused renomination. HEIPED NOMINATE LINCOLN.

Mr Sage took an active part in the Chicago convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln.

While in Congress he did not neglect his business and made many flying trips to Troy, and it was during one of these trips that he met Jay Gould for the first time. Mr.

Sage gave up his business in 1857, the year of the great panic, and, with a capital of about $750,000, devoted himself to financial operations. Because of advances he had made he had to become the owner of the part of the stock of the Lacrosse railroad. This road later formed the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul system. It was in the early days of the civil war that Mr. Sage began to operate in Wall street, and in 1863 he removed to New York, where he has lived ever since. He bought a seat in the Stock Exchange in 1874, but was seldom seen on the floor. He was in his day the king of the "puts" calls and straddles class of operatives, and although he was the partner of Jay Gould and other Wall street kings he was always cool, never excited, cautious and as serene as the most disinterested person. His friends say that on the memorable day when Grant & Ward went to the wall Mr. Sage showed some signs of emotion. But it was only for a short time, and when he paid in cash the $6,000,000 which the failure cost him, and appeared the next day as serene as usual. The friendship between Mr. Sage and Jay Gould was close and sincere. Each helped the other and they were associated in some of the most gigantic enterprises of their day.

ATTEMPT AT HIS MURDER.

The most dramatic incident in his career undoubtedly was on Dec. 5, 1891, when he was confronted in his New York office by an insane youth who demanded a large sum of money and upon being refused, dropped a satchel which contained a dynamite bomb. Mr. Sage luckily escaped harm from the explosion.

HAD $25,000,000 ON CALL.

Russell Sage was undoubtedly the largest private money lender in the world. There are comparatively few banks that have had as large an amount of outstanding loans. It has been estimated by bankers that several years ago Sage had an average of $25,000,000 out on call throughout the year. When the rates were especially attractive he usually added $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 more, and only recently he had Wall street at his mercy and put out millions at rates running as high as 12 and 14 per cent.

There was hardly a man in Wall street who more thoroughly enjoyed the quiet simplicity and restfulness of country life than Mr. Sage. He occupied a handsome, but simple, frame house at Lawrence, L. I. It is surrounded by some five acres of land, with spreading shade trees, cool and grateful lawns, and having numerous box hedges, which afforded much relief to the wearied eye of the tired Wall street man. In this quiet retreat Mr. Sage enjoyed his summers for many years.

This summer home contains a number of pets of the deceased financier. Among the collection were many cats. His colts and fillies were his prime favorites, and some handsome, full grown maltese cats were close seconds. On one occasion he offered a reward of $10 for the return of a family cat which had strayed or was stolen from the Sage Fifth avenue mansion. A number of well trained parrots also formed an interesting part of his collection of pets.

His frugal habits and methodical manner of living no doubt had much to do with his reaching the ripe age to which he attained.

The Word "Cannibalism."
The word "cannibalism" is really the name of a people. It is identical with Carib, many of the Caribs, who formerly flourished in the West Indies, having been consumers of human flesh. The letters "l," "n" and "r" are interchangeable in certain aboriginal American language, so that Columbus found one West Indian island saying "Caniba" where another said "Carib," while Shakespeare's Caliban is another variety of the same. Columbus' own conjecture was that the name was connected with the great khan, and later philologists of the old slapdash type associated with "canis," a dog. Apparently, however, the meaning of "carib" was brave and daring.

No Faith In Him.
"Guess that freckled daughter of Thompson's must have a steady young man."

"What makes you think so?"
"The old man was in here yesterday to buy one of these newfangled contrivances that make a big saving in the gas you burn."

"I don't believe the young man's a steady. If he was they'd save all the gas."

There Are No Certain Ones.
"The only objection I have to this story," said the cynical bachelor, "is the frequent use of the phrase 'a certain girl.' The phrase is grossly inaccurate, as everybody well knows that all girls are exceedingly uncertain."

Love when true, faithful and well fixed is eminently the sanctifying element of human life. Without it the soul cannot reach its fullest height or holiness.—Ruskin.
