Blow Aimed on Cling-Mars Landed Full and Fair on Foster.

JOURNALIST CALLED TO THE BAR BUT EXPROBATION APOSTLE GOT THE PUMPELLING.

Ottawa, June 15.—Those who have seen, in the circus or on the vaudeville stage, the blow aimed at one man land fair and full upon the man behind, can get some idea of the scene in the House yesterday. Mr. Cling-Mars was at the bar of the house but it was Mr. Foster who got the pummeling. Notwithstanding the lecture Mr. Foster delivered the other day, or perhaps because of it, there was a slight demonstration as Mr. Cling-Mars made his appearance. It wasn't the Quebec members who made it, but a little group of British Columbians and Westerners, who do not know Mr. Cling-Mars, but who do not like Mr. Foster's schoolmaster style.

There was a debate, very technical and very lawyerish about what question the offending journalist should be asked after he had admitted that he wrote the article complained of. Mr. Foster wanted to know what words of his uttered "this session" could be held to justify the attack. Mr. Aylesworth objected to the limitation. Mr. Cling-Mars, in fact, had a lot of extracts from Mrs. Foster's caustic style. Mr. Foster is always saying nasty things, and there was no great difficulty in making a selection such as would entertain the house. The curious part of the performance was that Mr. Foster himself should ask for such citations, when he might have applied at once for censure after Mr. Cling-Mars had admitted writing the article. Of course the Liberals, or some of them, cheered every time a specially good example was cited, and all Mr. Foster could do was face it out. He did put a good deal of feeling into his speech, and for all the citations of offensive references to Mr. Sharrett and the hierarchy I think he was perfectly sincere. When he said he had never knowingly traduced the French-Canadian people. He accomplished his purpose, for Mr. Cling-Mars was censured, but what he has gained by it is hard to see, for the whole of the proceedings only showed that while he likes to strike hard he does not like to be struck hard. If it had been left to the natural inclination of the Liberal members, Mr. Cling-Mars would have gone scot free, not because the Liberals approved of what he wrote but because they would have liked to make Mr. Foster take a dose of his own medicine. Sir Wilfrid, however, is too good a tactician, and too conscious of what is due to the dignity of parliament, for him to indulge the fighting spirit of his followers so far as to ignore the use of such terms as "lying, cowardice and hypocrisy" towards one who is a distinguished member of the house, however little he may be liked. Sir Wilfrid therefore proposed that Mr. Cling-Mars be censured—much to the surprise of that worthy gentleman, one fancied—and censured he was.

THE DAYS OF GOOD QUEEN ANNE.

Nevertheless, the good sense of the House went out to applaud Mr. Duncan Ross when he argued that the case never ought to have been brought before the House. Mr. Ross is a journalist himself—from British Columbia—and he had no difficulty in proving that the censorship of the press is a function long ago abandoned by parliament—by the mother of parliaments—except in cases where the collective integrity of the House is assailed. In the time of James I. in the days of good Queen Anne, and even in the days of George III. and the Duke of Wellington, when the proceedings of parliament were supposed to be sacred from reports or outside comment, such proceedings were tolerated and even approved. But Mr. Ross challenged Mr. Foster to point to a single instance where resource had been made to the means of redress he was now invoking. In the very case cited by Mr. Foster, a couple of days ago, Mr. Ross quoted Mr. John Redmond as saying that he would not invoke chastisement by the House against newspapers which daily accused him of treason and of other high misdemeanors, and Mr. Balfour was quoted as of the view that the House never derived any profit or added anything to its dignity by inviting conflicts with the press. In following out his line of argument, and in proving that Mr. Foster had invoked a most extraordinary remedy for a very common wrong, Mr. Ross carried the debate to a much higher level than that at which it had been set by Mr. Foster himself, and maintained by the lawyers with their fine spun differentiations. The House approved his statement that the matter ought never to have been brought up, as it did Mr. Aylesworth's statement about cases "being laughed out of court." It will probably be many a long day before parliament has to deal with anything of this kind, for no member of the present House is likely to subject himself to such an ordeal as Mr. Foster has just gone through.

THE FRONT BENCH.

At yesterday's debate proceedings before a crowded House and crowded galleries, one's attention could not be drawn to the change that had taken place in the Front Bench, to the right of Mr. Speaker. Mr. Wilfrid sits where he sat for ten years. His first desk mate was Sir Louis Davies, then Sir William Mulock, now it is Mr. Paterson. On Sir Wilfrid's left Sir Richard used to sit. Then Mr. Fielding moved over into Sir Richard's place, and Mr. Fitzpatrick took the seat Mr. Fielding had at first. Now Mr. Fitzpatrick has gone. Mr. Fisher has moved down to the first row beside Mr. Fielding. Two seats to Sir Wilfrid's right sits Sir Frederick Borden, the other survivor of the first Laidlaw cabinet in the House of Commons, Sir Richard and Mr. Scott are ever in the senate. Messrs. Hyman, Brodeur, Aylesworth, Emerson, Oliver, Templeman and Lemieux, although we begin to be accustomed to their being ministers, are newcomers, some of them of the third flight, but all newcomers, when compared to the veterans of the Front Bench. Across the aisle the change is not so marked. Mr. Borden and Mr. Foster are there, and so are Mr. Haggart and Dr. Sproule. They are waiting, almost praying, for change over there, but the change does not come.

CURIOUS MARRIAGE PUZZLE.

Singular Story of Scotch Ceremony Heard in London Courts.

London, June 16.—An extraordinary Scotch marriage tangle came up in the divorce court recently on the divorce petition of Mr. Enrick Cecil Pherey, who alleged bigamy and misconduct on the part of his wife with the co-respondent, Mr. Henry Edward Cosgrove.

The petitioner deposed that on the 21st June, 1900, he married Margaret Horton Rutherford in Glasgow, by declaration, in the presence of witnesses. In January, 1899, he went to live in Glasgow, and the following August he met his present wife. In 1900 they became engaged. He saw an advertisement in a Glasgow paper that marriages could be facilitated by consulting a certain solicitor. He went to the office, accompanied by the respondent. Witness supplied the names and addresses, and the solicitor filled them in and afterwards read over the document.

What then happened?—We repeated the words after him, and we agreed to accept each other as husband and wife. We signed our names to the declaration, and then to the petition. Afterwards they went before the sheriff, with the witnesses, and he signed the papers that were presented by the solicitor. The next day the papers were handed to the registrar, who produced a book, which both witness and the respondent signed. The marriage was kept secret.

He and the respondent did not live together, as his means were not sufficient.

She had written that unless he provided a home for her she would consider herself "free." He replied that if she wanted her "liberty" she could have it. She had written that she had not left affection for him. She wanted to be married in a church. He gave her a ring at the solicitor's office, and she used to wear it. Her sister returned it, and at the same time she wrote asking if there really was a marriage. He sent an "evasive" reply, as he did not wish the sister to know of the marriage. The respondent had written to him stating that she was going to be married.

"That was rather a startling letter for a married man to get from his wife?" "Yes."

"Did you write congratulating her on her approaching marriage?" "I may have done."

"Did you know that if you assented to your wife being married you might be prosecuted for being accessory to her bigamy?" "I did not."

For the defence the respondent deposed that in 1900 she became engaged to the petitioner. He told her that if she went through the ceremony it would not be binding, and that they were not to regard each other as husband and wife until they had been married in the church. Upon that understanding she made the declaration. She had never regarded him as her husband. Once he wrote to her stating that he wanted to break off the "engagement," as he wanted to join the army. In April, 1903, she made the acquaintance of Mr. Cosgrove. Her husband wrote to her that she was at liberty to marry whom she pleased.

Further hearing was adjourned.

SLEIGHT OF HAND ARTISTS GOT $300.

Police Looking for Two Slick Thieves Who Relieved Mr. Johnson of His Roll.

Montreal, June 16.—Two sleight of hand thieves got the better of a gentleman by the name of Johnson, a stranger in the city, who is at present stopping at the Vancouver Hotel. Yesterday afternoon Johnson went out to the corner to buy a Star and while standing in the store, fell into conversation with a man who said his name was "Mac."

The two became familiar and finally Mac suggested a walk. They sauntered down around the wharves, taking in everything that there was to see, and telling each other the stories of their lives, Johnson becoming quite confidential and telling his companion that he had $300 in a bag in his pocket.

Later on they met a third party, who was introduced as a friend of Mac's. The three then sauntered up towards Mount Royal. On the way one of Johnson's new found friends said that keeping as much money as $300 in a bag was not safe. Come with him and he would show him how to keep it safely.

They then entered a hardware store and Johnson was persuaded to purchase a tin box in which to keep his money. He did so, putting his money inside immediately. The three then continued their peregrinations towards the park. Arriving at Fletcher's Field they sat down on a bench to rest, but Johnson's friends were fidgety, and finally made an excuse to get away, saying that they would return shortly.

Alone, Johnson thought he would see if his roll was O. K. Opening the box to his surprise there was nothing in it. The matter has been put into the hands of Chief Carpenter, and as he has a good description of the men there is every reason to believe that they will be captured.

SEDITION REIGNS IN ALL RUSSIA.

Regiments Honeycombed With Revolutionists, While Peasants Kill and Danish Proprietors.

St. Petersburg, June 17.—A monster petition praying the stoppage of executions, was presented to Emperor Nicholas to-day. The revolutionary propaganda has been conducted so actively among the soldiers of the Preobrazhensky Guard Regiment which has been considered one of the most faithful in the service, that the commander of the regiment has ordered the reading of all correspondence addressed to enlisted men. Quantities of letters to soldiers from their home villages have been seized, in which the writers implored the soldiers not to act against parliament if they should be ordered to do so, but rather to defend the deputies. The propaganda also is affecting officers at the capital, a number of whom have been relieved from duty with regiments in sympathy with the revolutionists.

A despatch from Tyer, says that Cossacks and Dragoons have been despatched to two districts nearby, where the peasants, losing patience at the inaction of parliament, are taking possession of the land. At Nohler, the proprietor of an estate in the vicinity who refused to distribute his land to the peasants was killed, while at Novgorod, several proprietors of estates in this province have been beaten and driven off by the peasants.

USEFULNESS OF THE SENATE.

Senator Edwards Objects to Any Radical Change.

Ottawa, June 15.—In the Senate yesterday Senator Edwards, resuming the debate on Senate reform, said the sentiment against the Senate had been created by an irresponsible portion of the press. At one time he thought the second legislative chamber was superfluous. His opinion had changed. He thought Ontario should have a second Chamber, and there were stronger reasons for the Federal second Chamber. As a business man, when he went to the Commons he came to the conclusion that a committee of the commons was the business of the country better than the whole House. He thought, too, that business was put through too slowly. This opinion had changed. He now thought bills were put through the Commons and the Senate too hastily. However, they got better consideration in the Senate than in the Commons. Senator Edwards did not think that there should be much change in organization. He agreed with Senator Ferguson that as far as possible men should be appointed who had previous legislative experience. He did not think the majority in the Senate should become too large. The Senate was largely a judicial body, and like Judges, Senators when appointed should largely abandon their political predilections. Some system should be devised to maintain the political equilibrium in the Senate. That was the only improvement he would suggest.

Sensor Wood said none of the proposals for improvement made in the debate so far appealed to him. He thought the great preponderance of Senators from one party, such as existed in 1896, was not likely to occur again. He did not have the same dread of a large majority in the Senate as some other speakers.

NERVOUSNESS, A CALAMITY.

Many who don't realize what lies beyond, treat an attack of the "nerves" with indifference. Others consider it will soon pass away. But in every case nervousness is a calamity. Only one remedy will cure it—Ferrozone—a nerve strengthener that acts through the blood. First it gives you appetite—you eat plenty. This fills the blood with nourishment for the inner nerve cells. Energy and strength is instilled into every part of the system. You get well—keep well—nervousness forever departs, because you've used Ferrozone. Price 50c. per box of fifty tablets at all dealers.

LADIES APRON.

What would womankind do without the ever useful apron to protect her gowns. In performing any task about the house, dirt is sure to get on one and the wise woman knows that an apron at the right time is worth the cost of a dress.

The sketch shows a new design for an apron which covers one completely. It is the only sensible kind for real service as it insures the safe wearing of any gown into the kitchen, and is yet not unattractive. The fanciful yoke may be edged with plain white bands or be neatly stitched. The full blouse portion is not only pretty and becoming but practical as it allows plenty of room for the waist beneath. The square Dutch neck is neat and easily finished. For an apron of this kind an inexpensive gingham or percale would prove most serviceable. In the medium size 4 1/2 yards of 6429 sizes, 32 to 42 inches bust measure.

FUR COAT WAS SENT.

Engineer Rainboth Refused to Accept Gift from Alderman Cunningham.

Ottawa, June 15.—E. J. Rainboth who was Engineer on the Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal survey up to January last, gave sensational evidence in the public accounts committee involving Alderman Walter Cunningham in an improper transaction with the department of public works. The charge is that Mr. Cunningham attempted to bribe the government engineer with a gift of a $1000 coat. The alderman had sold horses, sleighs and robes to the government and they were inspected by Engineer Rainboth. Mr. Rainboth cut down the account by $300 and a dispute ensued between him and Mr. Cunningham.

Just as Mr. Rainboth was leaving the stand today, Hon. George E. Foster asked him if Mr. Cunningham ever urged to have his full account passed.

"Well, it's not a very nice thing to talk about," answered the engineer, with hesitation.

The committee listened and the "Mr. Cunningham," he said, "tried to bribe me with $100."

He went on to say that Mr. Cunningham sent him a coat worth two boys, which he took to be a gift before that he was speaking to Mr. Cunningham about getting a coat and the alderman told him it would cost him nothing. Mr. Rainboth said he then said he did not want it that way.

An invoice accompanied the coat bearing the price, $100, and discounts marked 40 per cent, 25 per cent, 15 per cent, and one three per cent. Mr. Rainboth added these up and estimated that the price had been cut down to two dollars, a mere nominal sum. The invoice was on Mr. Cunningham's business paper and two bolsters delivered the article. Mr. Rainboth sent back the coat and heard no more about the affair.

Mr. Honore Gervais and Mr. Loggie, Liberal M. P.'s, thought the coat might have been sent in good faith.

By deducting the discounts in the usual business way the bill would show that thirty dollars was asked for the coat.

hired by Henry C. Frick, the steel magnate, and a detective of the Rochester force, Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman left Rochester recently for the west. The ceremony did not occur until the afternoon, when they were united in marriage according to the Anarchist creed in the home of Mrs. Jacob Hochenstein sister of the Goldman woman.

The bride and groom were found at the Central Station just before the train pulled out. All the usual tale evidence that betrayed newly married couples were lacking, which is not to be wondered at, considering the rather unconventional nature of an anarchistic wedding.

"No, there is no truth in the report that we were married in Detroit," said Mrs. Goldman-Berkman. "We were not married until this afternoon in my sister's house. Of course we were married according to our own beliefs as to what marriage should be. That is, we agreed that we should live together as husband and wife for at least two years, and if satisfied at the end of that time that married life is a success we will continue this life."

He landed in New York in 1863, and at once enlisted in the civil war for the northern cause, and served until its close. He then moved to Woodstock, Ont., later going to Windsor and six years ago he removed to Detroit.
