GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

(Richard Greaves)

Copyright, 1904, by Herbert S. Stone & Company

On Thursday morning the Flitter steamed off down the bay, and the flight of the prodigal grandson was on. No swifter, cleaner, handsomer boat ever sailed out of the harbor of New York, and it was a merry crowd that she carried out to sea. Brewster's guests numbered twenty-five, and they brought with them a liberal supply of maids, valets and luggage. It was not until many weeks later that he read the vivid descriptions of the weighing of the anchor which were printed in the New York papers, but by that time he was impervious to their ridicule.

On deck, watching the rugged silhouette of the city disappear into the mists, were Dan DeMille and Mrs. Dan, Peggy Gray, Rip Van Winkle, Reginald Vanderpool, Joe Bragdon, Dr. Lotless and his sister Isabel, Mr. and Mrs. Valentine—the official chaperon—and their daughter Mary, Subway Smith, Paul Pettingill and some others hardly less distinguished. As Monty looked over the eager crowd he recognized with a peculiar glow that here were represented his best and truest friendships. The loyalty of these companions had been tested, and he knew that they would stand by him through everything.

There was no little surprise when it was learned that Dan DeMille was really to sail. Many of the idle voyagers ventured the opinion that he would try to desert the boat in mid-ocean if he saw a chance to get back to his club on a westbound steamer. But DeMille, big, indolent and indifferent, smiled carelessly and hoped he wouldn't bother anybody if he "stuck to the ship" until the end.

For a time the sea and the sky and the talk of the crowd were enough for the joy of living. But after a few peaceful days there was a lull, and it was then that Monty gained the nickname of Aladdin, which clung to him. From somewhere, from the hold or the rigging or from under the sea, he brought forth four darkies from the south who strummed banjos and sang ragtime melodies. More than once during the voyage they were useful.

"Peggy," said Brewster one day when the sky was particularly clear and things were quiet on deck, "on the whole I prefer this to crossing the North river on a ferry. I rather like it, don't you?"

"It seems like a dream," she cried, her eyes bright, her hair blowing in the wind.

"And, Peggy, do you know what I tucked away in a chest down in my cabin? A lot of books that you like—some from the old garret. I've saved them to read on rainy days."

Four darkies who strummed banjos and sang ragtime melodies.

Peggy did not speak, but the blood began to creep into her face, and she looked wistfully across the water. Then she smiled.

"I didn't know you could save anything," she said weakly.

"Come now, Peggy; that is too much."

"I didn't mean to hurt you. But you must not forget, Monty, that there are other years to follow this one. Do you know what I mean?"

"Peggy, dear, please don't lecture me," he begged so piteously that she could not be serious.

"The class is dismissed for today, Monty," she said airily. "But the professor knows his duty and won't let you off so easily next time."

CHAPTER XIX.

At Gibraltar Monty was handed an ominous looking cablegram, which he opened tremblingly:

To Montgomery Brewster, Private Yacht Flitter, Gibraltar:

There is an agitation to declare for free silver. You may have twice as much to spend. Hooray! JONES.

To which Monty responded:

Defeat the measure at any cost. The more the merrier and charge it to me. BREWSTER.

P. S.—Please send many cables and mark them collect.

The Riviera season was fast closing, and the possibilities suggested by Monte Carlo were too alluring to the host to admit of a long stop at Gibraltar. But the DeMilles had letters to one of the officers of the garrison, and Brewster could not overlook the opportunity to give an elaborate dinner. The success of the affair may best be judged by the fact that the Flitter's larder required an entirely new stock the next day. The officers and ladies of the garrison were asked, and Monty would have entertained the entire regiment with beer and sandwiches if his friends had not interfered.

"It might cement the Anglo-American alliance," argued Gardner, "but your pocketbook needs cementing a bit more."

Yet the pocketbook was very wide open, and Gardner's only consolation lay in a tall English girl whom he took out to dinner. For the others there were many compensations, as the affair was brilliant and the new element a pleasant relief from the inevitable monotony.

The Flitter saw some rough weather in making the trip across the bay of Lyons. She was heading for Nice when an incident occurred that created the first real excitement experienced on the voyage. A group of passengers in the main saloon was discussing more or less stealthily Monty's "misdemeanors" when Reggy Vanderpool sauntered lazily in, his face displaying the only sign of interest it had shown in days.

"Funny predicament I was just in," he drawled. "I want to ask what a fellow should have done under the circumstances."

"I'd have refused the girl," observed Rip Van Winkle laconically.

"Girl had nothing to do with it, old chap," went on Reggy, dropping into a chair. "Fellow fell overboard a little while ago," he went on calmly. There was a chorus of cries, and Brewster was forgotten for a time. "One of the sailors, you know. He was doing something in the rigging near where I was standing. Puff, off he went into the sea, and there he was puttering around in the water."

"Oh, the poor fellow!" cried Miss Valentine.

"I'd never set eyes on him before—perfect stranger. I wouldn't have hesitated a minute, but the deck was crowded with a lot of his friends. One chap was his bunkie. So, really now, it wasn't my place to jump in after him. He could swim a bit, and I yelled to him to hold up and I'd tell the captain. Confounded captain wasn't to be found, though. Somebody said he was asleep. In the end I told the mate. By this time we were a mile away from the place where he went overboard, and I told the mate I didn't think we could find him if we went back. But he lowered some boats, and they put back fast. Afterward I got to thinking about the matter. Of course if I had known him—if he had been one of you—it would have been different."

"And you were the best swimmer in college, you miserable rat!" exploded Dr. Lotless.

There was a wild rush for the upper deck, and Vanderpool was not the hero of the hour. The Flitter had turned and was steaming back over her course. Two small boats were racing to the place where Reggy's unknown had gone over.

"Where is Brewster?" shouted Joe Bragdon.

"I can't find him, sir," answered the first mate.

"He ought to know of this," cried Mr. Valentine.

"There! They are picking somebody up over yonder," exclaimed the mate. "See! That first boat has laid to and they are dragging. Yes, sir, he's saved!"

A cheer went up on board and the men in the small boats waved their caps in response. Everybody rushed to the rail as the Flitter drew up to the boats, and there was intense excitement on board. A gasp of amazement went up from every one.

Monty Brewster, drenched, but smiling, sat in one of the boats, and leaning limply against him, his head on his chest, was the sailor who had fallen overboard. Brewster had seen the man in the water and, instead of wondering what his antecedents were, leaped to his assistance. When the boat reached him his unconscious burden was a dead weight and his own strength was almost gone. Another minute or two and both would have gone to the bottom.

As they hauled Monty over the side he shivered for an instant, grasped the first little hand that sought his so frantically and then turned to look upon the half dead sailor.

"Find out that boy's name, Mr. Abertz, and see that he has the best of care. Just before he fainted out there he murmured something about his mother. He wasn't thinking of himself even then, you see. And, Bragdon"—this in a lower voice—"will you see that his wages are properly increased? Hello, Peggy! Look out, you'll get wet to the skin if you do that."

If Brewster had had any misgivings about his ability to dispose of the balance of his fortune they were dispelled very soon after his party landed in the Riviera. On the pretext that the yacht required a thorough "house cleaning" Brewster transferred his guests to the hotel of a fascinating village which was near the sea and yet quite out of the world. The place was nearly empty at the time, and the proprietor wept tears of joy when Monty engaged for his party the entire first floor of the house, with balconies overlooking the blue Mediterranean and a separate dining room and salon. Extra servants were summoned, and the Brewster livery was soon a familiar sight about the village. The protests of Peggy and the others were only silenced when Monty threatened to rent a villa and go to housekeeping.

The town quickly took on the appearance of entertaining a royal visitor, and a number of shops were kept open longer than usual in the hope that their owners might catch some of the American's money. One morning Philippe, the hotel proprietor, was trying to impress Brewster with a gesticulatory description of the glories of the bataille de fleurs. It seemed quite impossible to express the extent of his regret that the party had not arrived in time to see it.

"This is quite another place at that time," he said ecstatically. "It is magnificent! It is superb! If monsieur had only seen it!"

THE CAR BROKE DOWN

And Boston Auto Party on Long Trip Had to Hire a Farmer to Help Them Out.

An automobile, containing two dust begrimmed gentlemen and two ladies, and towed by a farm wagon team was one of the sights which caused pedestrans on Queen street this morning to stop and stare in wonderment. The party was composed of Mr. W.W. Slocum and wife of Boston, Mr. J. T. Slocum of Providence and Miss Dora Davies of Cambridge, Mass. They left Boston in a Haynes auto three weeks ago, and made the trip to Fort Fairfield, Me., without mishap. While near that place they tried to climb a mountain with the auto, but it was more than the machine would stand, and the main shaft gave way. They got a blacksmith to make temporary repairs, and set out on their journey to this city. With their crippled machine they found progress necessarily slow, but they succeeded in getting as far as Hawkshaw, where they gave up the struggle. Mr. Moses Palmer, a well known farmer of that place offered the services of his span of horses and truck wagon, and his offer was accepted. To be sure the outfit did not have a very dignified appearance, but it was the only way out of the difficulty. The party spent last night at the Seven Mile House, Kingsclear and came on to the city this morning, reaching here at nine o'clock. They had intended boarding the Victoria for St. John, but arrived too late so postponed their departure until tomorrow.

One of the gentlemen in conversation with a Herald representative said that notwithstanding the mishap the trip had been a very enjoyable one. He regarded the country along the St. John river as the most attractive seen during the trip, and regretted that the mishap to his car prevented the party from enjoying it as much as they otherwise would. The party are making their headquarters at the Barker House.

SUNLIGHT SOAP

is better than other Soaps but is best when used in the Sunlight way. Follow directions.

SUNLIGHT

WAY OF WASHING

FIRST.—Dip the article to be washed in a tub of lukewarm water, draw it out on a washboard and rub the soap lightly over it. Be particular not to miss soaping all over. THEN roll it in a tight roll, lay in the tub under the water, and go on the same way until all the pieces have the soap rubbed on, and are rolled up.

Then go away for thirty minutes to one hour and let the "Sunlight" Soap do its work.

NEXT.—After soaking the full time rub the clothes lightly out on a wash board, and the dirt will drop out; turn the garment inside out to get at the seams, but don't use any more soap; don't scald or boil a single piece, and don't wash through two suds. If the water gets too dirty, pour a little out and add fresh. If a streak is hard to wash, rub some more soap on it, and throw the piece back into the suds for a few minutes.

LASTLY COMES THE RINSING, which is to be done in lukewarm water, taking special care to get all the dirty suds away, then wring out and hang up to dry.

For Woolens and Flannels proceed as follows:—Shake the articles free from dust. Cut a tablet of SUNLIGHT SOAP into shavings, pour into a gallon of boiling water and whisk into a lather. When just lukewarm, work articles in the lather without rubbing. Squeeze out dirty water without twisting and rinse thoroughly in two relays of lukewarm water. Squeeze out water without twisting and hang in the open air.

☞ The most delicate colors may be safely washed in the "Sunlight" way.

SAVE THIS PREMIUM COUPON IT IS VALUABLE FOR SUNLIGHT SOAP PREMIUMS

$5,000 REWARD will be paid to any person who proves that Sunlight Soap contains any injurious chemicals or any form of adulteration
