YOUNG MAN'S DEATH.

Suddenly Developed Pneumonia and
Fever and Passed Away
This Morning.

Woodstock, July 26.—The death of John W. Keech this morning, was more than usually sad.
He was 26 years of age, and employed as a miller by J. M. Frapp.
On Sunday while in a field, he lay down in the grass, fell asleep caught cold, and pneumonia was the result. Fever developed and was fatal.
He was a very popular young man and an efficient member of the 67th regimental band. He is survived by his mother Mrs. Jas. Keech, his wife formerly Miss Gentle, daughter of John Gentle, and two small children.

BOY'S AWFUL DEATH.

HAMILTON, July 26.—Wilfred Lamond, a lad eleven years old, met with a terrible death today, falling from a hoist at the fourth story of the Bank of Hamilton.
Breaking almost every bone in his body, and with a skull fracture, the hoist, which is in the rear of the big nine-story building, is used to carry provisions and refuse to and from the restaurant on the top floor.
At all times of the day boys frequent the alley-way, and they have had a bad habit of playing with the hoist, catching hold of the iron at the bottom, ringing the bell, being carried up a short distance and then dropping to the pavement below. Between 10 and 11 o'clock this morning Lamond and two companions stumped each other to see how far they could go up. The others dropped after the hoist had gone a short distance, but Lamond held on and, before he realized it he had been carried up too high to jump off. Below were his companions and several men, who told him to hold on. Slowly the hoist kept going upwards, and as the poor lad's strength began to fail he commenced to cry and lose his nerve. The instructions from below were confusing, some telling him to hold on and others advising him to try and get out on the fire escape. No person seems to have thought of trying to have the hoist stopped. When the hoist reached the fourth story the lad made an effort to get out on the fire escape above it, being unable to hold on any longer he let go his grip and fell to the cement pavement below. It was an awful sight to see the poor lad going down to almost certain death and no effort made to break his fall. The eye-witnesses were beside themselves; there was not one cool head. The little body struck the pavement with a thud, landing on the side of the face. When the lad was tenderly picked up by Constable James Clark he showed signs of life, but it could be seen that there was no hope. He was taken in a hack to the hospital, where he died shortly afterwards. The deceased was a son of James Lamond, a trolley car conductor.

SAVED BY CLOTHES LINE.

Rope Broke the fall of New York Boy.

New York, July 29.—With a scream of horror as she saw her son Harry, nine years old, fall from the roof of the five-story building at 10 Pitt street, where they live, Mrs. Anna Nichol stumbled down the stairs to the yard last night to pick up his bruised and broken body. She was half way down when something bumped against her, a pair of lusty young arms were flung about her neck and a familiar voice cried:—
"Don't worry, mother, I'm all right!" It was Harry.
While Mrs. Nichol was hanging clothes on a line on the roof the lad was skylarking with other boys. Trying to jump across an opening of three feet to the adjoining building, he missed his footing and plunged headlong, but two stout clotheslines, one at the third and another at the first floor, broke his fall. He received only a few scratches.

Insulted Him.

Ferry—What was the matter with Johnson last night that he should get insulted when I asked him to drink? He is not a total abstainer, is he? Wallace—It was the way you put the question. He is subject to attacks of kleptomania, and when you asked him if he "wasn't beginning to feel like taking something" he got hurt, very naturally.

Conflicting Emotions.

"How happy a fellow feels when he has really repented of something wrong he has done!"
"Yes, and how infernally mad he gets when some other fellow recalls it to his mind afterward."

New York, July 29.—How Herr Ritter, second officer of the German liner, the Baner, which came in yesterday from Japan, was knocked senseless by a flying fish was recorded of the ship's log and solemnly vouched for by his brother officers.
Ritter had just bathed his face, because of the heat of the Florida coast last Sunday night, and the electric light in the room was burning brightly. He looked out and his last remembrance was of something striking him a heavy blow on his forehead. A seaman sent by First Officer Herberger to call Ritter to his watch on deck reported him unconscious on the floor.
After the ship's surgeon had revived him Ritter told the story of the blow and on the floor of the room lay a dead flying fish two feet in length. The skull of the fish had been crushed from the blow.

Blankets and Bullets.

A wet blanket hung loosely is almost as good a bullet stopper as a thin steel plate. The Yaqui Indians once beat the Mexicans by advancing behind a shield of wet blankets.

The Oil Spot.

Ten miles southwest of the Sabine pass in the gulf of Mexico is an area of calm water known as the oil spot. The sea there is always covered with a film of petroleum from oil springs rising at the bottom.

A Wet Rope.

A rope that is wetted shrinks in length, but at the same time increases in bulk.

A City in the Clouds.

The loftiest city in the world is Pasco, in Peru. It is 14,275 feet above the sea, and it nearly always freezes there in the shade. Pasco is famous for its rich silver mines.

The Compass.

The fleur-de-lis, which is always used to mark the northern radius of a compass card, is said to have been chosen by Flaminio Gloga out of compliment to the king of Naples, who was of French descent.
