ROBBIE BURNS' MISSION

LORD ROSEBERY TELLS WHAT THE POET DID FOR SCOTLAND.

At Glasgow Meeting At Which He Appeared As a "Jolly Beggar" to Plead For the Preservation of the Auld Brig o' Ayr, Made Famous By Burns, Who Had Transformed Scottish Life and Character.

Within the Banqueting Hall of Glasgow Municipal Buildings recently a meeting was held in furtherance of the scheme for preserving the Auld Brig of Ayr. The chief speaker was the Earl of Rosebery.

Lord Rosebery said he had come to Glasgow on many previous occasions, and in many different characters, but he never before came in the character of what their poet whom they were thinking of that day would have called "A Jolly Beggar." He was a jolly beggar that day—(cheers)—at least as jolly as he could be under the circumstances, because the avocation of a beggar was not very congenial to himself for want of practice. (Laughter.)

Well, he had begged in Edinburgh. He appealed to the old "Chuckie Reekie," as Burns called Edinburgh. He hoped the old Chuckie was going to lay some eggs. What he was asking of them that day was a certain sum of money to be got within a very limited time to save what was not merely the subject of one of Burns' famous poems, but was also an object of national and antiquarian interest. It was very desirable to save the Auld Brig. He regarded that as absolutely necessary; otherwise, suppose they failed to find the sum, they might have the Auld Brig purchased by some great American multi-millionaire, who would have all the stones numbered and have them again built together in his back yard at Chicago.

Stone of Destiny.

The real feeling he had at heart in this matter was to avert that stain from Scotland, and from the Scottish escutcheon, which he thought would be absolutely indelible. They had not many monuments in Scotland. Their principal stone monument was the Coronation Chair in England. (Laughter.) The Stone of Destiny was a stone associated no doubt with many tragic and interesting traditions, but he was not so sure that the Stone of Destiny itself was so interesting as this Auld Brig of Ayr—(cheers)—and if they allowed that brig to be destroyed—if they allowed it to be replaced by a structure, however valuable and however interesting, and however commodious that new structure might be, he did not think that they should be able to hold up their heads again.

What Burns Did.

Did they ever realize what Burns did for Scotland? Did they realize how completely he transformed our national life and our national character? It was perfectly true that the great rival magician, Sir Walter Scott, did in a sense more for Scotland than even Burns did, because he enveloped the whole country in a haze of romance which could not die away; but Scott had never dwelt in the hearts of the Scottish people as Burns had done. His birthday at this moment was celebrated in few centres, whereas the natal anniversary of Burns was a subject of festival wherever the sun shone throughout the whole civilized world. (Cheers.) There was no birthday of any dead man, perhaps there was no birthday of any living man—the King included—which was so universally commemorated as the birthday of Burns; and why was that? Because he was a man. (Cheers.) He was, besides, a genius, flesh of our flesh, blood of our blood, and bone of our bone. (Cheers). He spoke the accent of Scottish manhood. He spoke rarely in the classical phraseology of England, but in the language and dialect of Scotland, and therefore to them he was a Scottish representative man. (Cheers.)

Picture of Burns.

Coming through in the train to Glasgow he made the couplet—

O'er Burns Scotland wept with annual pang,
But would not save the sacred stones he sang.

Suppose by some magic power they could summon Burns there that day. Suppose that by the door through which he and the others came to reach the platform, Burns was to come clumping in in his peasant shoes, in his worsted stockings, and with his broad, pleasant face, out of which looked those globes of fire containing a world of poetry and thought—those eyes which Sir Walter Scott never saw matched, though he saw the great men of a gigantic era. Suppose that peasant could walk in with his somewhat uncouth form and speak to them as he spoke, and as few men had ever spoken, because all who knew him agreed in saying that his conversation was more wonderful than his poems. Suppose he came in there and asked them to save the Auld Brig for his sake, why they would have broken down the reporters' barrier, they would have sprung upon the platform, and they would have produced their shillings, emptied their purses, in fact, laid down their watches and chains and rings and every personal ornament, and laid them at the feet of Robert Burns. (Loud cheers.)

Want $50,000.

Why, sir, great millionaires of the world would spend their substance in giving thousands for the manuscripts of his poems, would give hundreds of thousands for a shake of his hand or for the sound of his voice, yet we cannot raise £10,000 now that he is dead to save the object on which his heart was set. (Cheers.)

Ah, it is not to me you are listening to-day; it is not I who speak to you; it is Burns himself. He has left this legacy. In this book lies the very manuscript of that poem in which he appealed to posterity to save the Auld Brig. I don't believe I hold it in vain in my hands to-day. (Loud cheers.)

How She Looked.

Patience—How did the bride look?
Patrice—Oh, she looked straight ahead!

Earl Grey's Good Work.

Everybody in Canada wants to see Newfoundland a part of Confederation, but few people would bring in the ancient colony without the full consent of its inhabitants. What is needed just now is that the people of both colonies should know one another better. To this end no one has contributed so much in recent years as Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada. Newfoundland papers are still recording the kind acts which Their Excellencies did while in Newfoundland last summer, and which aided in the conquest which Their Excellencies made of the hearts of Newfoundlanders wherever they went. One of these was the sending by the Countess Grey of the sum of $325 to aid an injured miner lying in the General Hospital at St. John's. Now Lord Grey is using every effort to have present at his musical contest in Ottawa a representative musical organization from Newfoundland. He very much desired the presence of the Ladies' Orchestra of St. John's, but, owing to the difficulties of traveling about the end of January, and for other reasons, the orchestra cannot come to Ottawa. However, Lord Grey is endeavoring to induce one of the other musical organizations to represent the ancient colony. All of which makes for a better understanding and a better feeling all around.

With Claw and Beak.

In a fierce fight with an American eagle, Jack Donahue and Frank Henry, two Dawson prospectors, nearly lost their lives on the Immachuck River, in the far north. The eagle was perched on a high bluff. Henry fired at it with a shotgun and the bird came tumbling down. Both men went to pick up the bird, but found it had only been stunned for a moment, and was full of fight. A terrific battle followed. The eagle took a grip of Donahue with his claws and of Henry with his beak. It bit a small piece out of Henry's breast and lacerated him in other places. Donahue had half his clothes torn from his body, and his face and body were severely clawed. Finally Henry managed to shoot the great bird dead.

Do not borrow trouble. The interest is too high.—Dallas News.
