NEW AMBASSADOR.

Bryce Reaches Washington, Presents His Credentials and is Cordially Received by Roosevelt.

Washington, Feb. 25.—Hon. James Bryce, the new British ambassador to the United States, arrived in Washington yesterday. He was given a hearty welcome and it is evident that those in high authority feel that his administration here is bound to be productive of great good to both countries and bind more closely the bond of harmony which now exists to such a marked degree.

After being introduced to President Roosevelt, Mr. Bryce said in part: "Mr. President—I have the honor by command of the King, my august sovereign, to deliver to you a letter accrediting me as his ambassador to the United States of America. When he entrusted to me this high mission His Majesty directed me to assure you of his earnest wish that the cordial relations which happily exist between Great Britain and the United States should be maintained and strengthened; and has impressed upon me the duty of doing whatever may be in my power for the attainment of this end. "It has been my good fortune to have been frequently in this country as a private traveller and student of its institutions, to have been received in it with unfailing kindness and to have learned not only to admire the untiring energy and the intellectual ardor of its inhabitants, but also to appreciate their devotion to the cause of moral and social progress and their passionate desire to make the lives of the people worthy of the material blessings which Providence has bestowed upon them with so bountiful a hand. Observing how much they have in common with the nation from which I come and how similar are many of the problems which lie before each for solution, I am led to believe that each is, and indeed must be intimately interested in the fortunes of the other, and that their reciprocal good will will be for the mutual benefit of both, and indeed for the benefit of the world at large.

"I may perhaps be permitted to add that in expressing my sincere respect for your personality, I am expressing the sentiments of my sovereign and of his subjects generally." The President in response said in part: "You have come among us, Mr. Ambassador, not as a stranger, but as one whom our people know and whose presence through long previous acquaintance with your labors as a student on the high destinies of self-governed communities and as a friend of moral and social advancement in the paths trodden by your country and by our own. The aims of the Anglo-Saxon race wherever established throughout the world are akin to the furtherance of the great principle of representative government of the community of material interest whereby the most complete stability, individual development and national prosperity may be achieved. In coming among us you transfer your life work to new fields of practical opportunities like those for which you have labored earnestly and honorably through a useful lifetime and I trust the continuance of your efforts in the mission to which you are called will be as congenial to you as they are acceptable to us."

AFTER THE SPOILS.

Belleville Tories Quarrelled Over Patronage and Government Appointed Non-Applicant to Police Magistracy.

Belleville, Ont., Feb. 25.—The disaster of a service of 23 years in the talk of the town here, and consternation reigns in the Conservative camp, threatening severe rupture. The appointment of Mr. Masson, brother of the late Judge Masson, as a candidate for the position of Police Magistrate, was not an applicant for the position.

The Ontario, the leading Liberal organ in this district, says: "Having decided to sacrifice Mr. J. J. B. Flint, Police Magistrate, in order to place at their supporters who have been making a name for themselves with shouts of 'Kill, kill,' the Whitney government found themselves in trouble. The Tories of the city were divided as to the choice of an appointee and civil war has been raging amongst them for the past two weeks. There were two camps formed of the adherents of two candidates for the appointment. The first to move on the enemy's works was the faction headed by two gentlemen who had loudly expressed their detestation of the spoils system, Sir Macdonald and J. W. Johnson, both of whom were very quick to seek to invest its results. Entirely ignoring their party's executive, they induced a prominent member of the city council, Mayor Sulman, to invite a few supporters of their nominee to meet and pass a resolution in his favor which recommendation was intended to be taken at Toronto as emanating from the party in Belleville.

The other faction were not slow to enter into the contest, and the county representatives and members of the government were deluged with letters and bored by interviews until life had become a burden to them. Rendered desperate by the clamor of the warring factions, the Whitney government solved the problem by appointing a gentleman who had not been an applicant, but the outcome as to the Tory party remains to be seen. The general public, however, will regard the appointment as a good one, for Mr. Masson has never been an offensive partisan. As to Mr. Flint, the retiring Magistrate, who has ably filled the position for 23 years, he will take with him in his regard of all the people of Belleville, of whom a very large number will resent his unjust and uncalled for removal from office without cause."

ARMY REFORM SCHEME.

London, Feb. 26.—In a most elaborate and able speech in the House of Commons yesterday, which lasted three hours and was supplemented by printed memoranda explaining the details, War Secretary Haldane, presented to the country his eagerly awaited scheme for army reforms, which proved to be the most ambitious and far-reaching military measure brought forward in Great Britain in half a century.

Mr. Haldane described his speech as a "soldier's budget," in so much as, acting upon a hint of the late Randolph Churchill to "trust the soldier," he had virtually entered into a covenant with the army that what it wanted for military efficiency should be granted while the army on its side agreed to cut down everything intended merely for show and not for efficiency.

As an indication of the saving effected by War Secretary Haldane the military, volunteer and volunteer, under the existing conditions, cost $22,155,000 a year, where the estimated cost of the new territorial force is only $14,445,000.

The war secretary explained that under his scheme the expansion and contraction of the forces would be easy and if other nations generally agreed to reduce their armed forces Great Britain could gradually do so without destroying the organization as a whole and equally, should the necessity demand it, Great Britain

Here is the EXPLANATION

Of the Superiority of Columbia Disc Records.

On January 2, 1907 the United States Court of Appeals handed down three important decisions which not only gave the Columbia Phonograph Co. the control of manufacture of disc records in the United States, but it also pays them an extraordinary tribute to the patented process by which Columbia Records are made.

The superiority of Columbia's recent make over any other disc record made is admitted by all. You may hear them anytime at
