CHINA'S PARLIAMENT.

The People Being Prepared for Self-Rule.

PEKIN, October 24.—The idea of the throne for the preliminary constitutional government of China, which has been in process of formation since the arrival in Peking of recently-appointed general councillors, was revealed today by the insurance of several Imperial edicts.

The provincial officials and the metropolitan boards have been ordered to select a minimum of one and a maximum of five men from each province or board qualified to receive government rank and office. It is not yet intended to hold any elections, but the provinces have been commanded to erect adequate legislative buildings, and the various governors have been told to select representatives, whose powers are for the moment limited to debate, but who are eligible to seats in the imperial assembly.

When a pretty girl is indignant all the men in her vicinity sit up and take notice.

JUMPED ON FORK HANDLE.

Albert Murtha of King's Wharf Receives Terrible Injuries.

LINDSAY, Ont., October 24.—A shocking accident occurred at King's Wharf, in Emily township, on Saturday evening. Albert Murtha, son of Mr. Thomas Wurtha, aged nineteen years, is now lying at the Ross Hospital here in a very serious condition.

A thrashing was going on at the farm of the boy's father, and when the whistle blew at 6 o'clock to cease work he jumped off a straw stack, alighting on a fork standing upright in the ground. The fork handle tore a gaping wound in his bowels, entering just above the groin.

The young man suffered great agony on the way to the Ross Hospital in the ambulance, the trip lasting almost five hours. The wound is of a most serious nature, and the condition of the victim of the accident is extremely dangerous.

The best way to pay attention to what people think of you is to pay your debts.

Beverly of Graustark

In the midst of his thoughts a sudden light burst in upon him. His eyes gleamed with a new fire, his heart leaped with new animation, his blood ran warm again. Leaping to his feet, he ran to the window to reread the note from old Franz. Then he settled back and laughed with a fervor that cleared the brain of a thousand vague misgivings.

"She is Miss Calhoun, an American, going to be a guest at the castle," not the princess, but Miss Calhoun. Once more the memory of the clear gray eyes leaped into life. Again he saw her asleep in the coach on the road from Ganlook. Again he recalled the fervent throbs his guilty heart had felt as he looked upon this fair creature, at one time the supposed treasure of another man. Now she was Miss Calhoun, and her gray eyes, her entrancing smile, her wondrous vivacity, were not for one man alone. It was marvelous what a change this sudden realization wrought in the view ahead of him. The whole situation seemed to be transformed into something more desirable than ever before. His face cleared, his spirits leaped higher and higher with the buoyancy of fresh relief, his confidence in himself crept back into existence. And all because the fair deceiver, the slim girl with the brave gray eyes who had drawn him into a net was not a princess!

Something told him that she had not drawn him into his present position with any desire to injure him or with the slightest sense of malice. To her it had been a merry jest, a pleasant comedy. Underneath all he saw the goodness of her motive in taking him from the old life and putting him into his present position of trust. He had helped her, and she was ready to help him to the limit of her power. His position in Edelweiss was clearly enough defined. The more he thought of it the more justifiable it seemed as viewed from her point of observation. How long she hoped to keep him in the dark he could not tell. The outcome would be entertaining. Her efforts to deceive, if she kept them up, would be amusing. Altogether he was ready, with the leisure and joy of youth, to await developments and to enjoy the comedy from a point of view which she could not at once suspect.

His subtle effort to draw Haddan into a discussion of the princess and her household resulted unsatisfactorily. The young guard was annoyingly unresponsive. He had his secret instructions and could not be inveigled into betraying himself. Baldos went to sleep that night with his mind confused by doubts. His talk with Haddan had left him quite undecided as to the value of old Franz's warning. Either Franz was mistaken or Haddan was a most skillful dissembler. It struck him as utterly beyond the pale of reason that the entire castle guard should have been enlisted in the scheme to deceive him. When sleep came he was contenting himself with the thought that morning doubtless would give him clearer insight to the situation.

Both he and Beverly Calhoun were ignorant of the true conditions that attached themselves to the new recruit. Baron Dangloss alone knew that Haddan was a trusted agent of the secret service, with instructions to shadow the newcomer day and night. That there was a mystery surrounding the character of Baldos, the goat hunter, Dangloss did not question for an instant, and in spite of the instructions received at the outset he was using all his skill to unravel it.

Baldos was not summoned to the castle till noon. His serene indifference to the outcome of the visit was calculated to deceive the friendly but watchful Haddan. Dressed carefully in the close fitting uniform of the royal guard, taller than most of his fellows, handsomer by far than any, he was the most noticeable figure in and about the barracks. Haddan coached him in the way he was to approach the princess, Baldos listening with exaggerated interest and with deep regard for detail.

Beverly was in the small audience room off the main reception hall when he was ushered into her presence. The servants and ladies in waiting disappeared at a signal from her. She arose to greet him, and he knelt to kiss her hand. For a moment her tongue was bound. The keen eyes of the new guard had looked into hers with a directness that seemed to penetrate her brain. That this scene was to be one of the most interesting in the little comedy was proved by the fact that two eager young women were hidden behind a heavy curtain in a corner of the room. The Princess Yvette and the Countess Dagmar were there to enjoy Beverly's first hour of authority, and she was aware of their presence.

"Have they told you that you are to act as my especial guard and escort?" she asked, with a queer flutter in her voice. Somehow this tall fellow with the broad shoulders was not the same as the rugged goat hunter she had known at first.

"No, your highness," he said easily. "I have come for instructions. It pleases me to know that I am to have a price or honor and trust such as this."

"General Marlanx has told me that a vacancy exists, and I have selected you to fill it. The compensation will be attended to by the proper persons, and your duties will be explained to you by one of the officers. This afternoon, I believe, you are to accompany me on my visit to the fortress, which I am to inspect."

"Very well, your highness," he respectfully said. He was thinking of Miss Calhoun, an American girl, although he called her "your highness."

"May I be permitted to ask for instructions that can come only from your highness?"

"Certainly," she replied. His manner was more deferential than she had ever known it to be, but he threw a bomb into her fine composure with his next remark. He addressed her in the Graustark language:

"Is it your desire that I shall continue to address you in English?"

Beverly's face turned a bit red, and her eyes wavered. By a wonderful effort she retained her self control, stammering ever so faintly when she said in English:

"I wish you would speak English," unwittingly giving answer to his question. "I shall insist upon that. Your English is too good to be spoiled."

Then he made a bold test, his first having failed. He spoke once more in the native tongue, this time softly and earnestly.

"As you wish, your highness, but I think it is a most ridiculous practice," he said, and his heart lost none of its courage. Beverly looked at him almost pathetically. She knew that behind the curtain two young women were enjoying her discomfiture. Something told her that they were stifling their mirth with dainty lace bordered handkerchiefs.

"That will do, sir," she managed to say firmly. "It's very nice of you, but after this pay your homage in English," she went on, taking a long chance on his remark. It must have been complimentary, she reasoned. As for Baldos, the faintest sign of a smile touched his lips, and his eyes were twinkling as he bent his head quickly. Franz was right; she did not know a word of the Graustark language.

"I have entered the service for six months, your highness," he said in English.

"Your highness, I fear we have spies and eavesdroppers here."

Baldos. "You have honored me, and I give my heart as well as my arm to your cause."

Beverly, breathing easier, was properly impressed by this promise of fealty. She was looking with pride upon the figure of her stalwart protegee.

"I hope you have destroyed that horrid black patch," she said.

"It has gone to keep company with other devoted but deserted friends," he said, a tinge of bitterness in his voice.

"The uniform is vastly becoming," she went on, realizing helplessly that she was providing intense amusement for the unseen auditors.

"It shames the rags in which you found me."

"I shall never forget them, Baldos," she said, with a strange earnestness in her voice.

"May I presume to inquire after the health of your good Aunt Fanny and, although I did not see him, your Uncle Sam?" he asked, with a face as straight and sincere as that of a judge. Beverly swallowed suddenly and checked a laugh with some difficulty.

"Aunt Fanny is never ill. Some day I shall tell you more of Uncle Sam. It will interest you."

"Another question, if it please your highness. Do you expect to return to America soon?"

This was the unexpected, but she met it with admirable composure.

"It depends upon the time when Prince Dantan resumes the throne in Dawsbergen," she said.

"And that day may never come," said he, such mocking regret in his voice that she looked upon him with newer interest.

HOW TO CURE A COLD.

The question of how to cure a cold without necessary loss of time is one in which we are all more or less interested, for the quicker a cold is got rid of the less the danger of pneumonia and other serious diseases. Mr. B. W. L. Hall, of Waverly, Va., has as used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for years and says: "I firmly believe Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to be absolutely the best preparation of the market for colds. I have recommended it to my friends and they all agree with me." For sale by all dealers.

UPPER QUEENSBURY.

October 21.

The farmers are getting along very slowly digging their potatoes and some of them, owing to the wet weather, have just finished harvesting.

Mr. A. Ketch and crew left on the 16th for the scene of his lumbering operations on the Restigouche.

Mrs. A. Ketch and daughter accompanied her husband to Restigouche.

A Basket Party was held in Maple Grove Hotel on the 9th inst where a most enjoyable evening was spent. The sum of $13.85 was realized, which is to go towards the repairing of the United Baptist Church.

Owen Manuel and Murray are now on a business trip to Clinton County.

Ora Corey, who has been ill with hip disease of several months past has so far recovered as to be able to get around with crutches. This is very pleasing to his numerous acquaintances and friends and a great credit to the physician in charge of his case.

Mrs. Pond and Miss Effie Pond of Gibson were the guests of Mrs. Pond's sister, Mrs. Pecuniac Manuel.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Hagerman attended the funeral of their niece, Miss Lottie Jewett on the 4th inst. Miss Jewett who was a most estimable young lady leaves a number of friends in this place to mourn her death.

Miss Sylvia Hieman and her brother Judson were the guests of Miss Nellie Ingraham one Sunday quite recently.

Miss Gladys Ross recently spent a week among relatives in Southampton.

Miss Georgie Ingraham spent a couple of days recently in Fredericton.

J. H. Long of Woodstock has been spending a couple of weeks with relatives in this place.

Time still goes on as it does go slow, and the boys will soon be back from the potato diggings, how much more pleasant it will be than receiving letters and souvenir cards, now won't it girls?

We have had two flurries of snow here quite recently.

A box of fresh dry sand is an excellent thing to have in a corner of the storeroom or pantry. If apples are carefully packed in the sand they will keep fresh and unshrivelled for months.

Paint stains on floors may be removed by pouring a little drop of benzine on them. Let it dry and then rub the stains with emery paper or powdered pumice-stone on a damp cloth.
