MEN WHO LEAD LORDS.

Marquis of Lansdowne Said to Be a Subtle Warrior—Lord Crewe His Chief Opponent.

The striking parliamentary picture of recent days has been the duel in the House of Lords between an aristocratic Unionist and an equally aristocratic Radical.

There are keen thinkers and brilliant speakers on both sides of the House of Lords, men who would give distinction to any legislative gathering, but in the recent debates there have stood out two personalities, clean cut and dominant. They are the generals commanding the forces on each side; men who have not only to fight the Opposition, but to guide and, in some cases, repress their own followers. They have distinguished themselves in striking fashion. Their unceasing patience with platitudes, their skill in the verbal flanking of opponents, their unshakable courtesy, and their sudden deadly swiftness of attack, have seized the attention of the most casual visitors.

The two men are the Marquis of Lansdowne, leader of the Unionist peers, and the Earl of Crewe, the present virtual leader of the Liberal peers.

Rather Bald.

The Marquis of Lansdowne is a famous leader, a tried and subtle warrior, who never flinches, who always goes out to win. He is a slim little man, with a statesman's head. He is rather bald, with iron-grey moustache, curved, powerful nose, and non-committal eyes, and gives the impression of a delicately made aristocrat, with a reserve of iron strength.

He is always perfectly dressed, and his distinguishing mark is a neat dark tie, fastened in a bow. He walks with quick, nervous steps, and it requires but little imagination to understand that behind an impassive face his brain is working continuously and rapidly. As he sits among his colleagues his back is erect with the rigidity of a grenadier, and he stands to address the House with the same stiff, unbending pose. One is aware that in spite of his smooth words nothing on earth would turn him from his purpose.

Illuminating Argument.

A hush always falls on the Lords when Lord Lansdowne rises from his place in the east middle of the front Opposition bench, and steps forward and lays his hand on the despatch-box on the table. For the House knows it is to have real guidance and illuminating argument.

Lord Lansdowne does not speak very frequently, even though he leads his side. But the peers know that when there have been hours of argumentative tangle, when the desires of Government and Opposition alike have been obscured by amendments, and counter-amendments, it will be Lord Lansdowne who will rise and in two minutes pull the heart out of the argument, and hold it up for the House to see. But that is only one part of his power as leader. He has a most penetrating voice, possessing the peculiar property of inspiring confidence. It is almost impossible for a man with any sympathy with Lord Lansdowne to hear him speak and believe him wrong.
And he unites to this a mastery skill in the management of men.

Is Sarcastic.

He reveals in grave sarcasm. Lord Crewe made a speech on a subject which he desired to leave a matter for open voting among his followers.
Lord Lansdowne congratulated his friend on his eloquent speech. "I have followed it," he said, "with earnest attention, not only on account of the importance of the subject, but also on account of the noble lord's judicial attitude. I admired his earnestness and eloquence, but what impressed me most was his impartiality." A pause, and then he said, "I did not know on which side of the fence his lordship was coming down."

Lord Crewe, the present great opponent of Lord Lansdowne, has added daily to his reputation in the conduct of the bill, and daily impressed his personality more deeply on the House.
He is a delightfully romantic figure, slim, extremely tall, with a very winning manner. He is comparatively young, but has the wisdom of seventy. Picture to yourself this slim figure standing up from among the handful of his gray-bearded colleagues, and with smiling eyes and soft, persuasive voice, gently beating arguments into the other side with his silver pencil-case. He looks the typical debonair aristocrat, and goes to his work with a certain serious gaiety delightful to behold.

Full of Facts.

But for all this Lord Crewe is a master of debate. More than that, he has conquered the intricacies of a complex subject with a thoroughness which would do credit to the professional chief of a department. He is laden to the finger-tips with facts and beneath his courtesy there is an immovable firmness. He will set forth technical details with an enlightening wit, and will express his uncompromising hostility to a suggestion in words of honeyed sweetness.

And so Lord Crewe continues with his hopeless task, trenchant, witty, sometimes gay, and always undismayed, sometimes taking hard knocks, but never failing to return them, a gallant fighter and a clever man.

London Postoffice at Christmas.

People who profess to believe that the state could never manage this or that monopoly well have only to look at the postoffice. Around Christmas the work goes up by leaps and bounds, and yet it is handled certainly as smoothly as any private corporation could handle its Christmas trade.
What this increase means in a great city like London is seen when it is stated that between seven and eight thousand extra men were taken on to assist. On the Saturday and Monday preceding Christmas 55,000,000 letters and newspapers were delivered within the metropolitan area, that is to say about eleven letters or papers to every man, woman and child in London.
Besides this the postoffice handled all the outgoing mail and the incoming parcels not counted in the above.

A City of Caravans.

The first of November is the official beginning of winter in Paris. Then, no matter what the temperature be, fires are lit in the schools and public buildings, and the janitor turns on the heat for the sad race of flat dwellers. Then all the smaller shows which cannot pay for a "stand" in the streets or squares go into winter quarters.
Where? I found a city of them out in the waste lands by the great gate of Montrouge. In an empty lot were scores of caravans drawn up behind the wooden palisades, ranged so as to form veritable streets, named after this showman or that. Dogs, chickens, rabbits, children, swarmed everywhere.
Corkscrews of smoke rose from the chimneys of the wagons. Gaudy rags were drying on lines. Will you look in one of the vans? It has two rooms. In one are the beds. The other is for eating. On all sides the walls are lined with closets and drawers. A little stove glows near the door. Here they are born, here they live and die, the eternal dynasties of the voyagers.—Vance Thompson in Outing Magazine.

The Truly Beautiful.

There is, it has been said, no fixed standard of art criticism. What is lauded today is discarded tomorrow, and even connoisseurs disagree bewilderingly; but, glancing back over the ages, it will be found that the discord has been caused by technical divergence and that in every land and among all peoples the truly beautiful has been generally recognized and correctly esteemed. No one questions today the beauty of the Greek temple or the charm of the Babylonian pottery.
It does not require trained eyes to recognize the merit of an oriental flower painting or to find delight in one of Whistler's nocturnes. The fundamentals in each instance are the same—rhythmical line, fair proportions and harmonious coloring. We have to be led oftentimes up the ascent of art, and there is much discussion concerning the byways, but once on the height all discussion ends, and we no longer need a guide.—Lella Mechlin in Century.

Neither evidence nor common sense nor reason has the slightest effect upon prejudices.—Goethe.
