Lily's Grammar.
The grammar longest in use in England was that of William Lily, first published in 1513. This grammar passed through more editions than any text book of the kind and was in use in St. Paul's school, London, up to forty years ago. The preface to the first edition was written by Cardinal Wolsey, the English rudiments by Dean Colet, the Latin syntax chiefly by Erasmus, the remainder by Lily, the book being then the joint production of four of the greatest scholars of the age.

THE FORTUNE FLUID.

How to Prepare a Magic Liquid That Will Do Wondrous Things.
To prepare the fluid with which you are to tell the fortunes of your friends you must put some quicklime into a quart bottle and then fill the bottle with cold water. Shake it well every now and then and at the end of the day set it away where it will not be touched during the night.

The next morning pour off the water into another bottle, leaving the sediment in the first one. And now, having provided yourself with some clean straws, such as are used in drinking lemonade, you are ready to begin your fortune telling.

As fortune tellers should not be exposed to the public gaze while they are engaged with their "victims," you should take your seat at a table behind a screen and invite them one at a time to consult you there. Before doing that, however, it might be well to privately fill a wineglass with clear lime-water and hold it up in the light for the company to see, telling them that it is the fluid of fortune.

When your "victim" seats himself at the table with you, say something like this:
"The crystal water will tell you the truth. Take this straw and blow through it in the water as if you were blowing bubbles, for, after all, fortune is but a bubble. If you are to be prosperous in life, the water will change to milk, proving that you will live in a land flowing with milk and honey."
In the course of a minute or two the water will become opalescent and then as white as milk, to the wonder of your subject. Caution him to keep his secret, and then you call for the next subject.

A Grain of Musk.
It is said that a grain of musk will diffuse a perceptible odor through a room for more than twenty years. It accomplishes this by filling the air with particles of its substance, but so inconspicuously minute are these particles that if the musk be weighed at the end of the twenty years no loss of weight can be detected. That seems incredible, doesn't it? And yet nature gives us many equally striking examples of what scientists call the divisibility of matter. A grain of copper dissolved in nitric acid will give a blue color to three pints of water. That means that each separate particle of water must contain a part of the grain of copper, which is thus, it has been estimated, divided into about a hundred million parts. The spider's web is so attenuated that enough of it to go around the earth would weigh only about eight ounces, and yet this slender thread is composed of about a thousand separate filaments.

Greece and Rome.
Every reader of history is struck by the similarity between the civilization of Rome and that of Greece in ancient times, but every one does not understand it. It is explained by the constant intercourse between the two countries after the subjugation of Greece by the Romans in the second century B. C. It was from the Greeks that the Romans got their knowledge of art, learning and philosophy and their fanciful system of mythology. In fact, Roman civilization was only a reproduction of that of Greece on a larger scale.

Of Course.
This primary teacher is ever watchful to keep a strict guard against disease in the class, so when Tommie came to school without his sister she inquired where Sallie was.

Tommy—she's sick?
Teacher—Tommy, where is your sister sick?
Tommy (amazed)—In bed.

Two Monkeys.
I had a little monkey once.
I tied him with a string.
He learned more tricks than I can tell.
He could do everything.

We romped and played together just like two great jolly boys.
The family said, "The monkeys made an awful lot of noise."

You see, they called me monkey, too, which teased my little sister.
I didn't mind, but baby did.
Because a monkey kissed her!
She said her mother shouldn't be the mother to a monkey.
Indeed, she scolded and carried on and acted awful spunky.

But now my monkey's gone away.
I sold him to a grinder.
And sister's sweet as sugar plums.
And I am homesome—kinder.
—Washington Star.

Were All Leather Eaters.
"And then," said the arctic explorer, "I ate my leather belt."

"Pooh, what of that? Every mother's son of us eats a pair of shoes a year." The explorer frowned. "This," he began, "is no laughing matter."
But the scientist interrupted him. "I am not jesting, sir. I speak the solemn truth. What is leather? Is it not albumen and tannin? Well, when you add milk to your tea or coffee, the tannin of the one and the albumen of the other unite, and leather results. Nevertheless it is there. And down it goes. All who drink tea or coffee daily," the scientist concluded, "consume in a year enough leather to make a pair of shoes."

The explorer sneered. "To resume," he said, "I then ate the lining of," etc.

Bats.
Bats hunt for food both at dusk and dawn. They are never to be found where water is not procurable. They feed on winged insects, especially moths, and when nesting hang head downward. From October to March they sleep without a break, and during the remaining months are awake only two or three hours a day.

Chinese Birds' Nests.
The nest which is made into soup and eaten by the Chinese is that of a bird closely allied to the swift. The nests are made of a gelatinous secretion from the mouth of the bird.

The Small Unwashed.
The Lapp baby belongs to the class of the small unwashed. When his mother is in a particularly neat frame of mind she daubs fat on it, and that is all the bathing that the youngster is likely to get, as it outgrows fondling and fat dubbing in time.

Ireland.
The inhabitants of Ireland were called "Scots" long before Scotland acquired her present name. The first name under which Ireland was known was Jernis.
