THE AGED LOVERS.

He has not won the world's applause. She knows he never will. His step is slower than it was. But he's an honest man. She wears the bloom of youth no more. Yet side by side they fare, Poor, bent old husband and gray wife. Along the humble walks of life, And still are lovers there.

WHERE THE SNOW IS DEEP.

How Nature's Lover Finds Some Interesting Records Therein.

The drifting snow that eddies about the low branched cedars, clears away from the naked trunks and climbs into inconvenient waves where unsuspected hollows lie in wait, reveals the strenuous life of the little inhabitants of the lingering woods, writes S. T. Woods in The Globe. The long, easy, eccentric leap of the cottontail shows from point to point where his bunched feet sink in the soft snow, and contrasting in sprightly irregularity with the straight trail of the dignified cat in search of a venturesome field mouse or a flock of hurrying snowbirds. There is always something fascinating about a new track in the snow. It is a piece of evidence that no casuistry can obscure and no array of facts and circumstances can contradict. It tells the somewhere at the interrupted and winding line is an animal, and at the other is the hole from which it emerged. The uncertainty of whence and whither adds the charm of speculation, and perhaps of the kinship of all the blind wanderers who leave the uncertain marks of their varied pilgrimages. A new track tells that an animal has recently passed, and shows whether he was quiet and leisurely or driven by alarm. It is easy to picture the marking of the trail in the dark, drizzly night, or on the crisp snow under the clear stars, or perhaps in the open day, when caution points to the shelter of the drooping branches and gathered shrubbery.

The squirrels have grown active since the snow covered up their stores of winter food, and are freely opening tunnels and excavations. For the little field mice, who work under cover and make only an occasional waddling and short excursion on the yielding surface, the snow is a piece of good fortune, for it leaves them free to feast on the soft bank of all the hunked-up trees and shrubs. But squirrels find the snow a serious inconvenience. They dig down to their stores of pine cones and bring them to the surface, scattering the gummy scales about on the clean snow while eating the diminutive seeds. Stores of beechnuts are less common, but a few have been preserved. The smooth depth does not conceal their location, for the empty shells on the surface tell of a feast on this rare delicacy. Acorns, too, are brought to the surface. The many evidences of such activity suggest a season of scarcity, for there are already many heavy drafts on the food preserved for the winter. The little fellows have not yet been driven by necessity to turn to the bitter cones of the hemlock. There is still a supply of more agreeable food under the snow. The early inroads on this store suggest a hard winter; but it would be presumptuous to pity the sprightly little climbers, whose every move and attitude seems inspired by the joy of abundant life.

Sleep Sickness Germ Isolated.

A discovery of great importance has been made by Dr. A. Watson, Dominion bacteriologist, at the quarantine station at Lethbridge, Alberta, no less than the isolation of the germ known as the trypanosomes, which causes "sleeping sickness," one of the scourges of Africa. Dr. Watson imparted to some of his friends the interesting information.

The dread germ was obtained from the blood of a cottontail rabbit, which the scientist captured for purposes of experimentation, and which had the disease of which the rabbits have been dying in great numbers throughout the country this winter. Every seventh year a scourge sweeps the rabbits almost out of existence. During the succeeding seven years the virus gradually accumulates in the rabbits, till another scourge again decimates them. This happened this year.

Modern Egypt.

A progressive Arab of Cairo is sinking wells and installing irrigation pumps at the foot of the pyramid of Cheops and the sphinx after gazing thousands of years on sand wastes soon will be looking out on green fields. This is one of the many demonstrations of the change from the old to the new Egypt.

HAS EYES LIKE OWL.

Daylight Is As Darkness to This Canadian Woodsman.

Because he has eyes like an owl and is unable to see during the day, Jacques Lombard, of the Lake St. John district, Quebec, is compelled to do all his hunting and trapping at night. He is the wonder of all the men in that district and many doubted the story until a fur trader named Jepson, who was never known to tell an untruth, went to see the man with the "night eyes."

As Lombard has never visited a physician, the cause of his affliction is not known, but it is believed to be due to an ultra-sensitive retina. Whatever may be the reason, it is certain that he cannot stand ordinary light, while at night he is able to see well. The extent of his vision may be judged from the fact that he shoots accurately at two hundred yards and can find a pin dropped among leaves when the night is so black that an ordinary man would be forced to grope his way through the forest. The darker it becomes the better is the trapper's vision, moonlight nights being less suited to his work. When light is entirely absent the pupils enlarge so as to seemingly cover the entire iris, while at noon on a bright day the pupils are the size of pin points.

Shortly before Jepson visited the trapper Lombard was forced by circumstances to subject his eyes to strong light, and the lids were greatly inflamed. But this condition disappeared after he had remained in a dark room twenty-four hours. To him the room was light until a lamp was introduced, when, as he expressed it, darkness radiated from the lamp. This explanation brought out the fact that the flash from a rifle appeared to him to be a black streak, momentarily clouding the atmosphere. To his eyes a searchlight would darken all objects touched by its powerful rays, and the letters of an electric sign would spell in black.

The trapper's visual affliction has rather aided than interfered with his work, as most of the game whose pelts he secures are nocturnal rangers and he can observe their habits with his own eyes. He has a cabin at the outlet of a small lake, which forms the source of the River Croche, lying due west of Dablon. Here Lombard sleeps during the day, and commences his duties at night. His traps are strung for three miles along the lake and in the forests adjacent to it, and the rounds of them are made while other trappers are asleep.

While Lombard's life has been particularly free from woodland mishaps, he has had some exciting experiences with wild animals, and on several occasions has been slightly wounded. His hurts have never been serious, and his physical health has been almost perfect. His one ailment has been chills and fever, which come when the heavy dews appear in the spring and summer.

The trapper never lacks for meat, for he is able to take sleeping birds without effort. When it comes to capturing partridges it isn't even necessary to use a gun. They can be knocked on the head with a stick. In fishing he isn't so successful, as he seldom bites at night, and even on cloudy days the light is too strong for him. Deer are nocturnal, as are moose, but Lombard says they are easily shot at night, as it is then they come to water to drink and feed on lily pads. In the daytime they hide and take their rest.

Jepson's story differs from former reports in that the trapper has possessed "night eyes" since birth. Formerly it was understood that Lombard had been partly blinded by the explosion of a pan of gunpowder and that thereafter he was sensitive to light. However this may be, it is true that the trapper's sight is better now than it was ten years ago. He is about forty years old, and is thoroughly contented with his lot. Apparently he has no inclination to have his eyes treated, although he has been told that he might be helped.

Weeds.

To give some idea of how weeds multiply it may be stated a single plant of pepper grass will produce 18,000 seeds; dandelion, 12,000; shepherd's purse, 37,000; wheat thief, 7,000; common thistles, 65,000; camomile, 16,000; ragweed, 5,000; purslane, 375,000; plantain, 47,000, and burdock, 43,000.

Paint.

If a tin of paint has to be left open, stir it thoroughly, so as to dissolve all of the oil, then fill up with water. When it becomes necessary to use the paint pour off the water, and you will find it as fresh as when first opened.

British Birds.

It is said that only two kinds of birds are absolutely peculiar to Britain. These are the red grouse and the coal tit.
