VALEDICTORY.

prond? Let every heart swell to think that he is a student and graduate of such a school.

Look at those who have left it. Have they not been honored and respected and famed not only in America but across the waters? Have not they enriched the world with their works? Have not they improved it with their virtues? Can we not follow, at least in a measure in their footsteps?

True it is, that there may not be among us poets and painters who will startle the world some day with our productions, but there is within each and every one of us, a mind, a soul and a conscience, those Gods given talents, which money cannot buy. Why have we received these?

To barter and sell for money's golden sheen? No, no, we are given this soul, this mind, and this conscience to use for the improvement of mankind and to our own salvation, to strengthen the weak, to enlighten the ignorant and to bring comfort and happiness to the afflicted, so that when the time shall come when we shall be called upon to leave this land of exile with all its joys and sorrows behind us, we shall have left humanity in a better state than that in which we found it, and that we have succeeded in making at least one life happier and better for our having lived.

You, all of you will start upon some new course, some new career but whatever you do, or wherever you go, let your motto always be that "Honesty is the best policy."

"This above all to thine own self be true,

And it must follow as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to and man."

Let not one graduate here today forget the dignity he should bear as the student of so grand a school; let him always bear in mind those grand and illustrious characters who have left it and let him strive, as far as he is able, to follow close upon their paths. We are to step into the world so strange, so new, but we are told that which awaits us in not all sunshine, that our paths will not always be strewn with flowers and that thorns will arise somewhere to sunshine behind the dark, lowering clouds.

There are joys and pleasures awaiting us but there is also sorrow and disappointment lying in wait for us. For did not one of our poets tell us, "Who breaths must suffer and who thinks must mourn." But let not that discourage us, let us be prepared so that when sorrows do come to us we may be able to bear through them bravely and well. For there is sunshine behind the dark, lowering cloud, joy like the friendly beam will come to soothe and comfort us, and we will doubtless be stronger and firmer after all we have endured and will come purged, as it were, with sorrow's tinging flame.

"Life is before ye!—and as now ye stand

Eager to spring upon the promised land,

Fair smiles the way where yet your feet have trod

But few light steps, upon a flowery sod:

Round ye are youth's green bowers—

And to your eyes,

Tho' horizon's line but joints the earth and skies,

Daring and triumphs, pleasure, fame and joy:

Friendship unwavering, love without alloy,

Brave thoughts of noble deeds and glory won

Like angels, beckon ye to venture on."

"Life is before ye! from the fated road

Ye cannot turn then take ye up the load,

Not yours to tread or leave the unknown way,

Ye must go o'er it, meet ye what ye may.

Gird up your souls within you to the deed

Angels and fellow spirits bid ye speed!

What though the brightness wanes, the pleasure fade,

The glory dim! Oh not of these is made

The awful life that to your trust is given,

Children of God! Inheritors of Heaven."

Frances Kemble Butler.

"And like some low and mournful spell

To whisper but one word, Farewell.

Farewell, farewell! a last sad farewell to all that has been ours, today as we are here to take our departure we feel drawn nearer to our school and teachers than ever before, something within us seems to speak in mournful tones, It is the last time."

Do you, can you realize fellow students that this is the last day, we shall ever be together within these dear walls. Soon we will leave to wander far and wide, but wherever we go, no matter what land or what profession calls us, let us always remember that we are natives of Canada, fair fruitful Canada! the dearest land on earth and that it is to her we owe our first respect among the nations of the world. Then once more farewell, the time has come when we shall leave these dear, grand old portals, forever.

In all probability some of us shall part never to meet again in this world. But there is another, a fairer a lovelier world for which we must all one day depart, leaving behind us this land of exile, trials and tribulations and may we all meet again in that land so fair, so holy beyond the clouds, beyond the skies, beyond life itself, and may not one name be missing on the great, white book and may the recording angel with her golden pen affix every name on its sooty white leaves.

"The end has come, as come it must

To all things, in these bright June days

The teacher and the scholar trust Their parting feet to separate ways.

They part, but in the years to be Shall pleasant memories cling to each

As shells bear inward from the sea, The murmur of the rhythmic beach,"

John Greenleaf Whittier.

The Stethoscope.

Laennec discovered the stethoscope in 1816, but 150 years before Robert Hooke had shown a knowledge of its principle. The theory of the stethoscope, which is regarded as a comparatively new invention, was known to Ruclid.

Jamestown.

The English settlement of Jamestown in 1607 was a private enterprise. American colonization was taken under the protection of the English government in 1624.

Missouri.

The original tribe of Indians from which the word Missouri was taken was "Omossouries," which meant in Indian language "dwellers at the mouth of waters," as the tribe lived near the mouth of the Missouri river. A number of histories state that Missouri means "muddy," which is erroneous.

The Frigate Bird.

The frigate bird can float in midair and go to sleep without the risk of falling. Its character is not very high. It follows fish eating birds that have picked up a meal from the water and compels them to part with it.

Baldness.

It is sometimes stated that ultra violet rays of the sunlight will cure baldness. The Scientific American says that the best and easiest way to try the violet ray treatment is to go about in the sunshine without any form of covering for the head. That authority holds that if all persons did this there would be little or no baldness.
