BLOW ON HEAD CHANGED LIFE.

Chicago Lawyer Who Disappeared Thirteen Years Ago
After Highwayman's Assault, is Found

Chicago, Ill., Feb. 19.—"Slugged" in Chicago thirteen years ago and "awaking" three days later in Hammond, Ind., minus all the money he possessed and half his clothing, Chas. McGee Williams, once a star University of Wisconsin baseball pitcher, became temporarily a tramp. Given up for dead by his relatives and friends, Williams' whereabouts remained a deep mystery until today, when he was found at Merrillville, Ind., by a friend of his youth. Williams' brother was notified, and the family have been reunited.

Declaring that his life is a wreck, caused by recurrent periods of loss of memory, due probably to a blow on the head suffered at the hands of Chicago highwaymen, Williams has remained in obscurity all these years in spite of the repeated urgings of the wife whom he married in Merrillville that he write for his relatives in Wisconsin and make known his whereabouts.

Williams came to Chicago in the latter part of June, 1894, to begin practicing law. On July following he disappeared. Dean E. Bryant of Madison Law School, took a personal interest in the case and engaged Chicago private detectives to trace the missing lawyer. The detectives got no further than the Briggs House, where Williams registered on July 3, and after a fruitless search of several months relatives and friends gave him up for dead.

This ends that portion of Williams' history which was known before today when he told the remaining portion himself.

"From the time I walked out of the Briggs House on July 3," he said, "until I came to myself in Hammond three days later my mind was completely a blank. My money, watch and part of my clothing were gone."

"I wandered about the sand dunes, through little villages, and finally I landed here in Merrillville. Since then at intervals my mind has played the same trick on me that it did at first. Sometimes the lapses continue for several hours, and sometimes for several days."

Williams was married to Miss Clara Saxton, of Merrillville, six years ago. They have no children. Mrs. Williams, who is forty-five years old, three years her husband's senior, has never ceased her efforts to locate him to make use of his education instead of eking out a homely living at odd jobs, as he has been doing.

Williams' family at White Water is one of the most prominent in that section of the Badger State. His father was a wealthy farmer and a brother now conducts the farm home-

He Made Them Read It.

Daughter—Have you found out yet what it was that papa cut out of the paper? Mother—Yes, I bought a copy. I've read it all through, but to save my life I can't see anything wrong in it. It's an article on the vulgarity and silliness of buying gowns that are beyond one's means.
