SONS OF ENGLAND.

Annual Church Parade of Islington Lodge.
Ab'e Sermon by the Coadjutor Bishop.

The members of Islington Lodge of the Sons of England attended divine service at the Cathedral Sunday evening and listened to a powerful sermon from Bishop Richardson. It was the annual church parade of the Order, and about fifty of the brethren took part. They formed up at the lodge room at 6:30 o'clock and marched to the Cathedral by way of Carleton and Queen streets, the Fredericton Brass Band heading the procession. The beautiful and impressive service opened with the singing of "Onward Christian Soldiers," after which the lessons were read by Rev. Sub-Dean Street, who also led in prayer.

THE SERMON.
The Coadjutor Bishop spoke from Haggal 2nd Chapter and fourth verse: "Ye people of the land work for I am with you." At the outset he extended a welcome to the Sons of England, an order which he said was founded on those principles upon which the strength of the nation must depend. The order stood for that patriotic manhood out of which the British empire was formed, and while its members believed in the communion of saints, he hoped they would also believe in a communion of patriotism. He went on to explain that patriotism is not a mere waving of the national flag, the jingoism of shot and shell, but it was a duty which one owed to the nation. He was not one of those who believed in peace at any price, as he realized that it was the price of honor. It is a mistake to think that the mere mastery of men at arms is the greatest national effort.

After quoting a verse from Kipling's "Recessional," the preacher went on to urge his hearers to be sober in their thoughts, to separate patriotism from everything that is superficial, and apply it to those things that denote a people's strength. The text he had quoted was applicable to public life, religious life and private life. After all, said he, a nation is only a great aggregation of the men and women who compose it. The building of a nation is not the result of natural growth, but it is an active thing, something accomplished by those who are part of the national life. There is a personal responsibility attached to everyone of us. No man is so small and insignificant that he cannot affect the national strength. The world's work is today being done by the great multitude of men of mediocre talents. We may pass through life unnoticed, but nevertheless we are doing our part. In every great bridge that is erected some of the stones are not in sight, yet they are an essential part of the structure. In every battle fought, men have died, who never were heard about, yet a victory is won as the result of every soldier doing his duty. And so it is with the nation.

in the building of a nation, the real lasting work is done not by the few men of genius, but by many of mediocre talents. No man can live without contributing something to the making or marring of the nation. No man can escape his share of responsibility in the national life of a country. In Canada today, we have a nation in the making, and the changes taking place are kaleidoscopic and startling in their rapidity. The flood gates of humanity of the world have been opened and immigrants in thousands are coming here looking for homes and are finding them on the great prairies of the west. We want strength first of all in public life, both in the aggregate and in the individual. How many men carry their conscience into public life today? Is it not a fact that many men accept civic and political responsibility at the cost of personal reputation. Some men will have nothing to do with public life because of the fear that it will soil their hands. In regard to civic politics, go where you will in Canada today and you will hear criticism of the sharpest kind of the men in control, and a shrinkage from responsibility on the part of those who might bring about a better state of affairs. It should be remembered that the public life of the state is our life and the only remedy for existing evils is the purifying of our own character.

The preacher, continuing, urged his hearers to be strong in their religious life. The greatest need of all, he said, was a generation of good fathers, that the men of our land may be truly Christian. There are many men, who while they do not live immoral lives, are satisfied to let things drift along—they are satisfied to let their wives and daughters look after the religion. Under existing laws a man can put his property in his wife's name, but he cannot transfer his religion to his wife. Your wife's religion will never save you, then give to Christ your manhood and strength. There is a battle to be won and you should strike a blow on behalf of that fight. There are young boys in this city, whose faces are set towards a drunkard's grave, and what are you doing towards saving them. It seemed to him that that was the source of true patriotism.

In closing his splendid address the Bishop remarked that England's greatness was not altogether due to her wealth in iron and coal, but to a sense of the sanctity of the home, a profound respect for religion, a preponderance of truth, and a ready recognition of the responsibility of citizenship. The impressive service closed with the singing of the National Anthem by the choir and band accompaniment. The brethren reformed in procession by the choir and band, marched by way of Brunswick street to the Church hall, where their disbanding. Mr. A. D. Thomas officiated as soldier doing his duty. And so it is with the nation.
