MILLIONAIRE'S SUICIDE

Said to have been a Woman in the case—
Barney the Knickerbocker Trust Co's
President.

NEW YORK, November 15.—The story of Charles Tracy Barney is lurid enough of any reader of high-spiced fiction. All the elements for the sensational novel, or drama, of so-called "high-life" are there—the millions with all they can give—great affairs and big enterprises—the family—society—financial panic—the villain and the woman. They are all in the story, and they all contribute to the fact that Barney is dead, and dead because he wanted to be dead.

If any one of these constituent facts had been lacking, perhaps Barney would not have killed himself. But it was the conjunction of circumstances, the knotting of the tangled threads, that caused this man to end his life with a bullet, when he was still not old, still healthy, and still could have had $3,000,000 with which to face the world, if he had closed every obligation.

Barney was big and handsome. He had always been rich. His father left a fortune of several millions. He followed the usual course, went to college, got married, and went in to "finance." He married a sister of William C. Whitney. He became the father of two sons and daughters. He became a member of most of New York's best clubs. Besides his business interests he cultivated the artistic side of life, to some extent. He was much interested in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in the theatre and in the opera.

He belonged to the connoisseur set of the very rich. On his business side he was autocratic, yet popular. He was known as one of the most imperious of the Wall Street bankers, yet had a reputation for helping others. He was popular with many, disliked by some, and extremely distrusted by a few. Some of the gigantic operations in real estate—and they were gigantic—are said to have come pretty close to the line of unfair dealing.

But Barney was successful. "Everything came his way," as one of his old time friends said today. His family grew and prospered. The Barney box at the opera was among the first described. The Barney "functions" were sought after in society. The Barney girls floated on the crest of the social wave, and married happily. The Barney financial enterprises waxed fat, although some of the old fogies shook their heads in secret.

A year ago his estate was carefully and conservatively appraised at $8,000,000. Even today, after the cataclysm and with the great shrinkage in values, it would realize nearly $3,000,000 at forced sale. With all the talk, there was no criminal prosecution pending against him, not as a matter of fact, had he brought himself within the pale of criminal law. Why then, did he shoot himself?

Among those who knew much about the matter is Charles W. Morse, the

BODY IDENTIFIED

Man Behrhead on the I. C. R., belonged to Moncton.

There is now no doubt, says the Moncton Transcript, that the man killed on the I. C. R. near Red Pine, on Tuesday morning is a Monctonian. He was Andrew Melanson of this city, and a son of Mr. Philip Melanson, an employee of the Dominion Cotton Mill, who resides on King street. Deceased was also formerly employed in the cotton mill and a brother and sister still work there. Deceased was about twenty years of age, and left home about a month ago, going north. His parents are unable to give any information as to his movements since he left home. The young man, was well known in the city and the news of his shocking death is a severe blow to his parents.

Say, mom, why do people laugh in their sleeves?
Because their funny bone is there.
