Beverly of Graustark

By
GEORGE BARR M'UTCHEON.
Author of "Graustark"

Copyright, 1904, by Dodd, Mead and Company

"If all this be true, Count Marlanx, may I ask why you, the head of Graustark's army, did not intercept the spy when you had the chance?"

Marlanx flushed guiltily. The question had caught him unprepared. He dared not acknowledge his presence there with the hired assassins.

"I—I was not in a position to restrain him," he mumbled.

"You preferred to wait until he was safely gone before making the effort to protect Graustark from his evil designs. Is that it? What was your object in going to the chapel—to pray? Besides, what right had you to enter the castle in the night?" she asked ironically.

"Your highness, may I be heard?" asked Baldos easily. He was smiling up at Yette from the bottom of the steps. She nodded her head a trifle uneasily. "It is quite true that I left the castle by means of your secret passage last night."

"There!" shrieked Marlanx. "He admits that he!"

"But I wish to add that Count Marlanx is in error when he says that Miss Calhoun was my accomplice. His eyes were not keen in the darkness of the sanctuary. Perhaps he is not accustomed to the light one finds in a chapel at the hour of 2. Will your highness kindly look in the direction of the southern gate? Your august gaze may fall upon the reclining figure of a boy asleep there in the shadow of the friendly cedar. If Count Marlanx had looked closely enough last night he might have seen that it was a boy who went with me and not!"

"Fool! Don't you suppose I know a woman's skirts?" cried the Iron Count. "Better than most men, I fancy," calmly responded Baldos. "My young friend wore the garments of a woman, let me add."

Lorry came down and grasped Baldos by the arm. His eyes were stern and accusing. Above, Yette and Beverly had clasped hands and were looking on dumbly. What did Baldos mean?

"Then, you did go through the passage? And you were accompanied by this boy, a stranger? How comes this, sir?" demanded Lorry. Every eye was accusing the guard at this juncture. The men were descending the steps as if to surround him.

"It is not the first time that I have gone through the passage, sir," said Baldos, amused by the looks of consternation. "I'd advise you to close it. Its secret is known to more than one person. It is known, by the way, to Prince Gabriel of Dawsbergen. It is known to every member of the band with which Miss Calhoun found me when she was a princess. Count Marlanx is quite right when he says that I have gone in and out of the castle grounds from time to time. He is right when he says that I have communicated with men inside and outside of these grounds. But he is wrong when he accuses Miss Calhoun of being responsible for or even aware of my reprehensible conduct. She knew nothing of all this, as you may judge by taking a look at her face at this instant."

Beverly's face was a study in emotions. She was looking at him with dilated eyes. Pain and disappointment were concentrated in their expressive gray depths; indignation was struggling to master the love and pity that had lurked in her face all along. It required but a single glance to convince the most skeptical that she was ignorant of these astounding movements on the part of her protegee. Again every eye was turned upon the bold, smiling guardsman.

"I have been bitterly deceived in you," said Lorry, genuine pain in his voice. "We trusted you implicitly. I didn't think it of you, Baldos. After all, it is honorable of you to expose so thoroughly your own infamy in order to acquit an innocent person who believed in you. You did not have to come back to the castle. You might have escaped punishment by using Miss Calhoun as a shield from her highness' wrath. But none the less you compel me to give countenance to all that Count Marlanx has said."

"I insist that it was Miss Calhoun who went through the panel with him," said Marlanx eagerly. "If it was this boy who accompanied you, what was his excuse in returning to the castle after you had fled?"

"He came back to watch over Miss Calhoun while she slept. It was my sworn duty to guard her from the man who had accused her. This boy is a member of the band to which I belong, and he watched while I went forth on a pretty business of my own. It will be useless to ask what that business was. I will not tell. Nor will the boy. You may kill us, but our secrets die with us. This much I will say: We have done nothing disloyal to Graustark. You may believe me or not. It has been necessary for me to communicate with my friends, and I found the means soon after my arrival here. All the foxes that live in the hills have not four legs," he concluded significantly.

"You are a marvel!" exclaimed Lorry, and there was real admiration in his voice. "I'm sorry you were fool enough to come back and get caught."

Montreal Star: As children they used to play together thousands of miles away from Montreal. She was the belle of the village while he was a likely lad who afterwards fulfilled the early promise of ability which he had displayed.

Their early days were spent in the little village of Mons, near Sunderall in northern Sweden. He went to college, and after becoming intimately acquainted with about a dozen languages obtained a situation as interpreter with the Allan line at Liverpool. He never heard of her or saw her again until one day three years ago, while on duty at the wharf in Liverpool he caught sight of a group of young women. One of the girls was particularly handsome and as he gazed at her he became convinced that this was his former playmate. Acting on impulse, he approached her and asked if she was Victoria Meyer. The young lady replied in the affirmative and he learned that in company with five other girls and an elderly woman who had charge of the party, she was bent on seeking her fortune in Canada. She did not know what she was going to do or what town she was to stay in. All that the young woman could say was that the elderly woman had visited the Swedish village and given such a glowing description of the wealth of the Dominion that she had persuaded six of the girls to accompany her abroad. It was understood that they would get work either as domestic servants or on farms. The woman in charge had paid all the expenses of their passage.

The interpreter had his suspicions about the business and advised the young woman to return to her own country. As she was broaching the subject to the conductress of the trip, the girl was informed that she could not possibly go back, as her fare had been paid. If she refused to proceed on the journey she would be imprisoned. Accordingly she crossed the ocean.

The next incident in this romantic story is as follows: On Wednesday the interpreter was reading the Star and chanced to observe a paragraph relating the arrest of a young Swedish woman named Victoria Meyer, accused of having deserted her two-year-old son by leaving him in a vacant lot on Cazela's street. The name was the same as that of his former friend, and he wondered if it was she who had got into the hands of the police.

The interpreter, whose name is Samuel Cobre, visited the Court House and a representative of the Star obtained for him an interview with the accused. He found that it was in fact his playmate, but sadly changed. She did not recognize him, despite the fact that he recalled many names and incidents connected with their life in Mons. The accused, as she stood before the iron bars, only giggled and smiled and Cobre left with the impression that she was not in possession of her right senses.

Mr. Cobre stated to the Star representative that shortly after the departure of the girl Meyer and her elderly companions in charge of the Swedish immigrants had denounced this system of immigration stating that the young women were being taken away for evil purposes. Mr. Cobre is communicating with the relatives of the unfortunate girl in Sweden and is prepared to do anything in his power to have her sent back to the homeland.

Victoria Meyer appeared before Judge Lafontaine and admitted having deserted her child. She was remanded for enquete till December 4.

THE DISCONSOLATE GOLFER.
(Chicago Record-Herald.)
These are the saddest days of all;
With splendid thoughts I rise,
The breeze blows gently from the south,
No clouds bedim the skies;
The sun casts friendly rays across
The distant, dewy slopes,
And to my duties I proceed
With earnest, eager hopes.

I go to work with all my might,
And, toiling faithfully,
I think of putting greens and tees
That softly call me back,
That softly call to me.
I clear the litter from my desk
As quickly as I may,
And go without my lunch to make
A speedy get-away.

At two o'clock the south winds die
And north winds wildly blow;
Dark banks of clouds obscure the sky
So fair a while ago.
The world is robbed of cheerfulness,
And, by the fates betrayed,
I think of all the splendid drives
And putts I might have made.

A BLOOD MIXTURE

A Fine Remedy which anyone can fix at Home.

All medical authorities are agreed that the blood is the great source of disease or of health in the human system. If the blood is pure, the individual is strong and healthy, if the blood is impure or diseased then there is sickness or decay in the whole system.

Rheumatism is strictly a blood disease. It is caused by excessive uric acid. Sores, pimples, etc., mean bad blood. Catarrhal affections must be treated through the blood to get permanent results. To get well, to feel strong, hearty and vigorous one must have good clean blood and lots of it. You can't clean the blood thoroughly unless the kidneys are made active. Bad blood means clogged, inactive kidneys and liver which causes, too, such symptoms as backache, nervousness, bladder and urinary difficulties and other sympathetic troubles.

Here is a simple home remedy and the recipe for making it up is as follows:

Fluid Extract Dandelion one-half ounce, Compound Kargon one ounce, Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take a teaspoonful after each meal and again at bedtime. The ingredients can be obtained at any good prescription pharmacy at small cost.

Here the readers of this paper have a simple yet powerful and effective remedy for all forms of blood, kidney and bladder diseases, which should relieve rheumatism and catarrhal affections and replace that weak, worn-out indifferent feeling with strength, vigor and health.

The prescription is considered a fine system renovator and being made of vegetable extracts only is harmless, and any one can mix it at home. Try this anyway before investing in the secret unknown concoctions of the patent medicine manufacturers.

Some years ago in a country district in Maryland a case was tried in which the evidence of the plaintiff failed to establish his claim. After his attorney presented his case the plaintiff asked if he would allow him to say a few words. The lawyer, considering his case lost, consented. He said:

"Squire, I brought this suit, and the evidence, except my own, is against me. I don't accuse anyone of lying, squire, but the witnesses are the most mistaken lot of fellows I ever saw. You know me, squire. Two years ago you sold me a horse for sound that was as blind as a bat. I made the trade and stuck to it, and this is the first time I have mentioned it. When you used to buy grain you stood on the scales when the empty wagon was weighed, but I never said a word. Now, do you think I am the kind of a man to kick up a rumpus and sue a fellow unless he has done me wrong?"

It took just five minutes for the jury to decide for the plaintiff.

Suffered From Heart and Nerve Troubles FOR THE Last Ten Years.

The heart has supplied to it two sets of nerves, one set which quickens, the other which slows its action. The proper action of these nerves, so important to the well-being of the heart, depends upon the general condition of the nervous system. If there be nerve derangement of any kind it is bound to produce all the various phenomena of heart derangement.

Knowing the intricate structure of the heart, and being aware how diseases of the nerves affect the heart, we have combined in Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a treatment that will cure all forms of nervous disorders as well as act on the heart itself, and in this is the secret of their success in curing so many cases of heart trouble which have defied all other treatment.

Mrs. John Riley, Douro, Ont., writes: "I have been a great sufferer from heart and nerve troubles for the last ten years. After trying many remedies and doctoring for two years, without the least benefit, I decided to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a trial. I am thankful to say that, after using nine boxes, I am entirely cured, and would recommend them to all sufferers."
