WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS ROSA STARR.

At the Head of a Large Newspaper Trade.

She is only twenty-five, but Miss Rosa Starr of Birmingham, Ala., through her own industry, can write her check for $50,000, and it would be cashed by any Birmingham bank.

Rosa was about twelve when her father died. He had been a newsdealer. Bad health ate up all he had. When he died a $1,000 life policy paid funeral expenses, lifted the debt on a small house and lot (now worth $10,000) and left $300 to secure a stock of newspapers and magazines.

Miss Rosa worked day and night. She made the trades; she kept the records; she hired, fired and bossed the newsboys working for her; she did the buying; she knew what kind of five cent and dime novels sold best; she cut the newspaper heads and sent back the returns; she visited the mail trains to get her consignments; she had ever the same buoyant and cheerful greeting for the customer, high or low; she was the baseball fan of the establishment, and she gave her judgment to the family lawyer before savings were invested.

Asked to what she most attributed her success, she said: "Work. I love to work. The joy of doing work and seeing it disappear before a cheerful doing is all I ask."

How to Fry.

To fry food properly a deep pan is needed, with a wire frying basket of a proper size to fit it. Fat is also needed in sufficient quantity to allow the articles fried to be completely immersed in it. The success of the process depends upon the temperature and purity of the fat.

In ordinary households a constant supply of the best possible frying medium, properly clarified fat, ought to be always at hand. All fat, cooked or uncooked; all skimmings from soups or gravies; all scraps of fat, must be collected and cut into small pieces. Then, with water in the proportion of a quarter of a pint to each pound of fat, they must be rapidly boiled in a covered saucepan, the lid being removed after boiling point is reached, and the cooking continue till not the faintest bubble is seen. Then only is it free from moisture and ready to be strained through a cloth into a basin, where when cool it will be a firm, compact mass of absolutely pure fat.

When wanted for cooking it must be placed in a deep saucepan quite an hour before it is needed to heat gradually and thoroughly, so that at the right moment it may be raised quickly to smoking point, at which the blue smoke is a signal that it is ready for food to be cooked in it.

The articles to be fried must be placed in the frying basket, a few at a time and not touching each other, and gently lowered into the fat, where they remain until they are a faint brown color, ready to be drained over the pan for a few moments and afterward set in the open oven or on the hot plate on paper to drain thoroughly. When frying articles requiring longer cooking, the pan should be kept at a cooler part of the stove after the first few moments, so that cooking goes on slowly. They are then drained as above. It must be remembered that fat must be raised to smoking point again before fresh articles are placed in it.

All greasiness of fried foods is caused by the fat being below smoking heat. When it is absolutely boiling it causes an invisible crust to form instantly, which not only prevents the fat entering, but the flavor from leaving, the food cooked in it.

Fat may be used again and again, but it must be clarified afresh after each using. A slice of raw potato placed in it will clear it, and it must still be strained through a cloth into a basin again. When it becomes much discolored by frequent use it should be melted, then mixed with water and carbonate of soda (half a teaspoonful to one quart of water) and boiled for half an hour, skimming thoroughly and setting aside till cold. Then cut up, scraping off all impurities, and clarify as before with water, boiling until all has evaporated, when clear fat will remain to be strained off.

Ruling the Home.

The man must busy himself with outside relations, he must get together the property and take care of it, he must sometimes participate in public affairs, and always be finds himself dependent upon circumstances. He does not really rule even the things which he fancies are under his control. He has to be politic where he would like to be reasonable, cautious where he would like to be frank. Sometimes it seems as if he were forced to be untrue where he would like to be perfectly honest. For the sake of some end, which often he fails to reach, he has to sacrifice the fairest thing of all—harmony with himself. Meantime the sensible and reasonable woman really rules within the house and makes every activity and every satisfaction possible for the whole family. What regular and serene action is needed to carry through the ever recurring movements of the household in an unbroken and living order of succession! To how few men is it given thus to move tranquilly as a star in its orbit and to rule both the day and the night! When a woman once apprehends and grasps this inner rulership she is dependent upon no one, and she confers upon her husband the only true independence—that which is inward and domestic.—Goethe's "Wilhelm Meister."

Care of Books.

If books were rightly treated when they are newly bound, there would be less likelihood of their backs being broken afterward by rough handling. The covers should be opened one at a time and laid as far back as the table upon which the book is resting; then gradually all the leaves, a few at the back and a few at the front of the book, should be laid upon the covers. The book will then be in condition for ordinary wear, and the covers will not break away if not abused. When called suddenly away from a book which you are reading, do not lay it face down on a table nor throw a handkerchief between its leaves, but have a bookmarker handy and place it between the leaves, closing the book.

A World of Dangers.

"Spiritous beverages," says Mrs. Chumrox, "have wrecked many happy dispositions." "Yes," answered her husband, "and so have salad, ice cream and coffee taken after 10 o'clock at night."—Washington Star.
