REFORM OF SENATE

OTTAWA, Jan. 20.—The lower chamber today had a long talk about abolishing the upper chamber. This was private members' day and this is a project dear to the hearts of a number of commoners.

Mr. Crockett was told by the Prime Minister that the contractor for the I. C. R. freight car repair shop at Moncton was G. A. Wallberg, the bulk sum for which was $56,630. To date $54,547 has been paid on account; there have been no extras. The contract for the passenger car repair shop, passenger car paint shop and office building at Moncton were awarded to C. E. Wallberg under a tender for $154,945. On account of the paint shop, $147,136 has been paid. No extras have been paid. The contract for the I. C. R. planing mill at Moncton was awarded to Rhodes, Curry & Co. for $23,995, and has not been transferred; to date $22,007 has been paid on construction account; there have been no extras.

Three motions regarding the upper chamber were combined for the purpose of discussion.

Mr. McIntyre of South Perth, moved that the senate be invited to co-operate with the commons for changes in the upper chamber looking to age limit and period of retirement; that other methods of selection of senators, a re-arrangement of the work of the two houses and to increase the usefulness and responsibility of the senate. Mr. Miller's motion was for the abolition of the senate on the grounds that it has not proved its usefulness.

Mr. Lewis' motion moved that the question of abolishing the senate or of changing the method of appointment should be submitted to the people at the next general election.

Mr. McIntyre said the questions regarding the second chamber came to the question of to amend or end. He thought abolition would not be workable. If the Commons were left to themselves they would assume an arbitrary attitude. A real remedy would be the reduction of the average age in the Senate. He proposed a Senate compound of twenty-five per cent by the Dominion government and a number according to its numerical strength by the opposition in the Commons. The vote power should be taken from the Senate.

Mr. Lewis declared there was strong feeling in Ontario for a reform of the Senate.

Mr. Miller followed with a speech favoring abolition of the Senate. It was not necessary and not worth the quarter of a million a year it cost the country. No further appointments to the Senate should be made until death had reduced its members to fifty. It should then be abolished and the survivors pensioned at the rate of $2,000 a year.

Mr. Schell, of Oxford, wanted reform and not abolition.

Mr. Smith of North Oxford, favored a system partly nominative, partly elective in regard to the Senate and was in accord with the proposal to impose a time limit. He suggested that universities should be represented in the Senate.

Dr. Daniel believed in two chambers and preferred nominative system to elective. He argued with a view that it was impossible to abolish the Senate and was opposed to a referendum but thought there might be a time limit, and possibly an age limit.

Sir Wilfrid said the Liberal party had always held the constitution of the Senate was unsatisfactory, and the Conservatives now seemed to have arrived at that opinion. Reform and not criticism was wanted. Liberals had been in power twelve years without finding a remedy. The Conservatives had suggested no plan for reform; it was a matter in which a cautious course should be pursued. He had no concise opinion to offer, but there were certain directions in which it seemed possible to offer suggestions.

The first reform of the Senate should be in the reduction as the number of the present Senate was too large. At present Quebec and Ontario had 24 senators each; New Brunswick and Nova Scotia 10 each; P. E. Island, 4. He would suggest that each province should be represented by six senators; that would give a senate of 54, and give the smaller provinces the same power as the larger. This would preserve the principle of minority representation on which the Senate was founded. Sir Wilfrid also favored a limitation of the term of a senator.

To preserve the independence of the Senate, Sir Wilfrid thought the term of a senator appointed should be limited. At present it looks as though senators were pensioners. At present there is a cleavage between the Senate and the House that nothing short of a revolution could unlock.

He did not see how to remedy this. As to the change in the method of appointments he thought the best way so far suggested was to have the Senators elected by popular vote from groups of counties. He thought well at one time of having Senators elected by the provincial legislatures, but did not think so now. That plan did not seem to work well in the United States. There was a good deal in the suggestion that Senators should be appointed by the House by groups of three giving each member of the Commons only one vote, so the opposition could always name one by grouping their votes.

Briefly, he thought the Senate should be reduced in size, that each province should be equally represented and that there should be a limit of the time. Sir Wilfrid said he had no positive views, however, except that the Senate should be reformed and he would like to hear more speeches and more suggestions.

Hon. G. E. Foster followed and advocated the election of Senators from constituencies separate from those which returned members of the Commons. He would have the time of a Senator for say ten years. The debate was adjourned.
