WITH THE WAR ARTIST

MELTON PRIOR TELLS OF CAMPAIGNING WORK.

Famous London Correspondent Confesses That He Is Particular About His Comforts When He Is at the Front and His Cart Is Famous—He Has Been Thirty-Five Years Following the Troops.

A few weeks ago, when the trouble in the Near East had reached an acute stage, an interviewer ran up against Mr. Melton Prior, the famous war artist and correspondent, in the Strand, London, and under the shadow of the fine old church of St. Clement Dances the following conversation ensued:

"Off to Bulgaria and Turkey?" asked the reporter.

Mr. Prior (laughingly): "Not this time. In the first place, I don't believe a shot will be fired, and, secondly, I am getting a little too old for European campaigns. They entail a tremendous lot of 'hustling' nowadays in order to get 'live' sketches and copy."

The fights are conducted at such long range—often six and seven miles—and the movements are carried out with such rapidity, that a man requires a very good pair of legs and strong constitution to keep up with the line of fire. I would not mind a Nile Expedition or a Zulu war, which can be taken in a more leisurely fashion. They would be a nice holiday."

"From which I gather that you still have a main eye for creature comforts?"

Mr. Prior (with a chuckle): "Well, I always believed in making myself comfortable. Other correspondents used to crack jokes about my cart, in which I carried all the little luxuries I possibly could; but they laugh best when we had to camp in wild regions, right away from any commissariat."

"Remember that at Ulundi, where, in 1879, Lord Chelmsford beat the Zulus in a decisive battle, I was the only man with a tent. Even Lord Chelmsford slept under a tarpaulin."

And then, as the reporter accompanied Mr. Prior to his office in the Illustrated London News building for a smoke and chat, the famous war correspondent told him of the great loss he had at Ulundi. "That Zulu campaign," he said, "lasted about six months, and the Battle of Ulundi was practically the last fight. In the excitement I was robbed of my sketchbooks containing my notes of the whole campaign. I was utterly broken up with disappointment, and I remember how I fell to the ground and burst into tears. Sir William Gordon Cumming, who was passing, called out, 'Never mind, Prior, here's my note-book. Run about and make your sketches again.' And this I did, but the loss of my earlier sketches was irreparable."

"It is rather a 'tall order,' Mr. Prior remarked, when asked to tell something about his earliest campaigns. 'It means carrying my mind back over a distance of thirty-five years for it was in 1873 that I made my first appearance on a battlefield in the Ashanti War. And I remember that I made a vow, when the enemy were screaming and yelling around us and sending their slugs from all parts, that if I ever got out of that fight alive I would try a more peaceful vocation. But, alas! I have been false to my vow. It was a case of 'What's bred in the bone,' etc., I suppose."

"By the way, if ever you go out to that part of the world don't forget your tips for the natives. I did, when I went out to the war in '73. My luggage was put into a surf boat, manned solely by the natives of the coast, and as we paddled to the shore they seemed to sing 'You plenty dash me.' I paid no attention, not understanding what they meant, the result being that out of revenge for not having 'plenty dashed' them—meaning paid them well—they let the boat swing broadside on to the shore, and the next heavy surf turned it over, landing my luggage and myself in the water."

"Did you ever hear, by the way, how the Standard was able to announce that peace had been signed between Britain and Boer after the war of 1881, not only before any other newspaper had the information, but also before the Government had received the official news from Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood?"

"I knew one of Sir Evelyn Wood's aides-de-camp, and I asked him to give me the quiet tip when Kruger had signed the peace document and Sir Evelyn was about to sign. The document was signed at O'Neill's farm, at the bottom of Majuba Hill, and a whole crowd of war correspondents waited outside for the official information. I had arranged, however, that as soon as the process of signing began the aide-de-camp should come outside and wink at me, while I signalled to Cameron, the Standard correspondent, who was lying on the ground some distance away with a horse behind a boulder, by raising my hat."

"The whole thing worked out exactly as I had planned, and Cameron was traveling as fast as his horse could take him to the camp telegraph station, when Sir Evelyn came out of the house and said to us, 'Gentlemen, I have to announce that peace has been signed, but I shall block the telegraph wires until my official despatch has reached the Government.'"

"I never think of my South African campaigning days," Mr. Prior continued, "without recalling that it was in the Boer War of 1881 that I was credited with making one of the standard jokes of South Africa. In those days we generally traveled from one town to another in heavy, uncomfortable post carts, usually drawn by six horses. The roads were of the worst possible description. But I did hundreds of miles in these post carts, and on one occasion, having a cheery colonial companion by my side, he asked me how I liked South Africa, and what did I think of the country. Carefully reading my pipe-case, I replied, 'that I thought it was a fine country to live—er—out of.'"

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Six men have been killed in an Indian uprising in Oklahoma. Aeroplanes at the aero show in London are selling at from $1,250 to $7,000.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie will probably contribute $75,000 to a public library for Hamilton.

Hamilton police raided a laundry and arrested two wagon loads of Chinamen on a charge of gambling.

President Taft is said to be in favor of free lumber, and to have no hesitancy in expressing his views on the question.

Engineer Hiram Hodgson, Fireman W. J. Perchley and Brakeman Thos. Leach were killed and two others injured in a head-on collision on the C.P.R., near Brandon.

The suffragettes on Saturday found a woman at Croydon, Eng., whose name had been placed on the voters' list by mistake. She refuses to vote in spite of their entreaties.

Blowing In the Yule.

Blowing in the yule from the grim old tower that had stood for 800 years against the blasts of the North Sea was one of the customs of the old town that abide, however it fares with the Nisse; that I know. At sun-up, while yet the people were at breakfast, the town band climbed the many steep ladders to the top of the tower, and up there, in fair weather or foul—and sometimes it blew great gusts from the wintry sea—they played four old hymns, one to each corner of the compass, so that no one was forgotten. They always began with Luther's sturdy challenge, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," while down below we listened devoutly.

There was something both weird and beautiful about those far-away strains in the early morning light of the northern winter, something that was not of earth and that suggested to my child's imagination the angels' songs on far Judean hills. I have never heard music since that so moved me. When the last strain died away, came the big bells with their deep voices that sang far out over field and heath, and our yule was fairly under way.—J. A. Riis in Century Magazine.

Colorful Zanzibar.

Zanzibar is the brightest, richest in color, most energetically commercial of all the East African ports. All is noise activity, glitter. Here the Indian merchant beseeches you from his bazaar. There children swathed in silk and hung with costly jewels and bangles stumble under your feet. Black women, draped below their bare shoulders in the colors of the butterfly, their necks and bosoms gay with chains, balance water jars on their heads. There is no street or house which does not suggest the scenic artist and the limelight. We expect the water girls to appear as slaves in the next act and that the Sultan's hand down in the palace square will presently strike up an operatic tune.—National Magazine.

The Wickedest Old Radical.

The fact that Sir Wilfrid Lawson has opened his campaign as prospective Liberal candidate for the Cocker-mouth (Eng.) Division recalls an amusing incident of his first introduction to politics twenty-two years ago. He was brought forward as Gladstone's candidate for Mid-Cumberland, in opposition to Mr. J. W. Lowther, the present Speaker, and was presented to his first audience by his father, the late Sir Wilfrid, as "the son of perhaps the wickedest old Radical ever allowed to get loose," and as "a young, unbroken colt, not trained at all."

Breechloading Cannon.

The breechloading cannon were among the earliest used. We find them on English and other ships as early as the last quarter of the fourteenth century, and therefore much before the time of the buccaners. The cannon was a mere tube, bound with heavy iron rings, and was loaded by the insertion of the "gonne chamber," an iron pan containing the charge, which fitted into and closed the breech. These guns were very clumsy affairs in comparison with the modern breechloader, but the principle was the same.

DENTISTRY.
