THRILLING EXPERIENCE.

Millidge then jumped from the bottom of her own boat and swam to the motor boat. It was with the greatest difficulty that the girls were pulled aboard Mr. Dykeman's boat as it was almost impossible to keep the craft head to seas to avoid her being swamped. While this was going on Mr. Dykeman's tender, smashed against the motor boat with such force that the rowlocks were broken to bits and the tender filled.

As soon as Miss Jack was taken aboard Mr. Dykeman's boat she collapsed. Her companion, however, seemed wonderfully fresh and strong for a girl who had been through such a trying experience. Notwithstanding the fact that huge seas threatened to swamp Mr. Dykeman's boat, he succeeded in reaching his moorings in front of his cottage in safety and was met there by Walter Flemming and others who had put out in another tender. All were taken to the shore and the young ladies removed to Mr. Dykeman's house. Miss Jack was put to bed and Dr. McInerney, who lives nearby, and Miss Hornbrash, a nurse, were summoned. It was not long before Miss Jack's condition improved, although at a late hour last night she was very weak and nervous. Dr. McInerney, however, did not anticipate any serious results.

A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

Mr. Dykeman, last night, speaking to The Telegraph of the affair said that it was one of the worst squalls he had ever seen on the river. He was not inclined to take much credit to himself for the daring rescue which he and his companions had made, but casually remarked that he valued his motor boat a great deal more now than he did before her remarkable feat in such a heavy gale.

(Miss Jack is a daughter of Dr. Brydone-Jack, of Vancouver, formerly of this city, and a niece of Prof. Ernest Brydone-Jack, late of the U. N. B. staff.)
