MONSTER CRACKERS.

They Are Becoming an Important Part of England's Yuletide.

It is not generally known that every season crackers are made in England ranging in size from 3 feet to 6 feet and even 7 feet in length. These giants of the cracker world, like the conventional article, are made to pull, when they go "crack," and are in every sense of the word a true cracker.

What the makers can cram into these monsters is simply surprising. A 3 foot cracker, costing $2, will contain presents for twenty-four persons, consisting of vases, tea-cups and saucers, figures, animals, birds, reptiles, and jewellery. In one of the big safes at one of the principal London hotels there was deposited a 3-foot cracker containing twenty costly pieces of jewellery. It was made to the order of an American millionaire, and was to be pulled on Christmas morning and its contents distributed to the guests.

Crackers measuring 6 feet and more in length are invariably made to order. Scores are turned out every season. In the large country houses the pulling of these monsters is rightly regarded as the principal event on the festive morning. Three or four children grip the huge bon-bon at each end and pull away until the middle falls apart, amid the roar of a miniature explosion. So far as their contents are concerned, that depends entirely upon your purse, the makers, as a rule, inserting into these giants the articles specially ordered.

One that went off this season in a Cabinet Minister's house contained a complete model railway, twenty toys, and one hundred smaller crackers. Another, ordered by a titled lady, contained two dozen musical toys, every one of which was made to blow. Often special toys, costing as much as $100, are inserted into these big crackers. At the same time a 6-foot cracker, containing a host of curios, novelties, small crackers, caps and paper suits, may be had for $5. One gets some idea of the popularity of this Yuletide novelty, which was unknown in England sixty years ago, when it is remembered that Messrs. Tom Smith, the makers of these giant crackers, alone turned out 20,000,000 this season.

SIKHS IN LONDON.

They Celebrate the Birthday of the Saviour of Their Religion.

A meeting of Indians in London was held recently at the Caxton Hall, Westminster, to celebrate the birthday of Shri Guru Gound Singh, "prophet, poet and warrior, the great nation builder of India," who flourished in the seventeenth century and in honor of whom a memorial banner hung over the presidential chair. Prof. Gokulchand delivered an address on the "Prophet, Poet, and Warrior," in the course of which he said that the name of prophet meant much more in the east than it did in the west. The could criticize Ruskin, Carlyle, Goethe, and Tolstoy, but this was not the case with the prophets of India, who were too exalted. They did not class Guru Gound Singh with Ruskin, with Goethe, or with Tolstoy, but placed him on a level with Christ. To them he was as Mahomet to the Mahometans, Buddha to the Buddhists, and Christ to the Christians. He then dealt at considerable length with the history of Guru Gound and the manner in which he created the Sikh nation, instituting rules and observances which had remained to the present day. Other speakers paid tributes to the memory of the Guru, and the singing of native songs concluded the celebration.

"Carlile—Church Advertiser."

Even in the world of commerce it would be difficult to find a greater advertising genius than the Rev. Wilton Carlile, head of the famous Church Army. Had he chosen to devote himself to a business career there is not much doubt that he would have made a fortune. His topical sermons at St. Mary-at-Hill draw hundreds of people every Sunday. Mr. Carlile recently confessed that he was a firm believer in the spiritual uses of advertisement, and he always found that the money spent came back in the collection. Once he advertised extensively a discourse on "Holbein's Big Swim." "If," said Mr. Carlile, "I had just announced in the ordinary way a sermon, say, on 'Jonah and the Whale,' I should probably have had a congregation of two or three old ladies. As it was the place was crowded three-quarters of an hour before the service began, and on going outside the church I found Holbein himself and his wife unable to get in. As there were no seats I had to accommodate Mrs. Holbein in the pulpit." On another occasion, a newspaper notice brought Mr. Carlile an invitation to a house in the West-end, where he found a lady who described herself as "cursed with £3,000,000." Some £30,000 of that sum has since gone to help the Church Army's good works.

Made a Name For Themselves.

A Toronto man was driving through one of the back parishes of Simcoe county. Presently his companion spoke of a family named Strathcona. "These people have a peculiar name," the visitor observed. "Strathcona! Where did they get it?" "Oh, it wasn't always Strathcona," said the driver. "They used to call themselves Smith. But Lord Strathcona, you know, his name was Smith; when he changed his name they changed theirs."

Rebuilding Three Rivers.

The work of rebuilding Three Rivers, Que., is proceeding steadily. Only six months have elapsed since the conflagration, but already about one-third of the burned district is built up or nearing completion—the class of buildings being in the main a great improvement upon the old structures.

HERMIT OF THE BUSH.

Australian Missing Link Proved to Be an Irishman After All.

Scientists in Sydney, N.S.W., have just suffered a great disappointment. Reports were brought in from Carcoar that a wild man, a veritable missing link, a tree-dweller and nut-eater, covered from head to foot with thick hair, had been discovered in the bush near Brown's Creek. Investigation showed that, while none of these reports was exactly correct, a man with hair four feet long had been found in a bark hut about 18 inches high, into which it was apparently his habit to crawl during bad weather. The "wild" man was taken to the hospital, where it was found that, broadly speaking, he was quite civilized. He said his name was James Fitzgerald, and declared that he had been living the life of a hermit for 25 years. He had, he said, been a follower of the Lord for ten years, of Samson for another ten, and of Hercules for the balance of the quarter of a century during which he had been lost to the sight of men. During all that period he had never washed, and he strongly resisted all attempts to make him have a bath at the hospital. As he is six feet two inches in height, and strong in proportion, it was no easy task to get him into the water, but in the end, with the aid of the police, the hospital authorities succeeded in persuading him.

SOCIALIST AND STORY-TELLER.

H. G. Wells Has No Great Opinion of the Present Day Author.

Before he discovered his forte, Mr. H. G. Wells, who has again earned the almost unanimous praise of the critics with his book, "First and Last Things," tried a variety of occupations. In his early days he aspired to become a black-and-white artist; then he tried the draper's counter, put in a year or two as a teacher, scribbled articles in his spare time, and by that means discovered his true calling. Nowadays he finds his chief amusement in the study of architecture, and, as the world knows, is one of the most serious-minded Socialists of the day. Mr. Wells, by the way, has no exalted opinion of the works of modern authors, judging from the following little story. Some time ago a friend was talking to him about the good times that novelists of to-day have, compared with those of the past. "You modern writers don't work so hard," he said, "and you are paid twenty times as much as you ought to be." Mr. Wells gently shook his head. "You labor under a misapprehension, my boy," he replied. "The chief difference between the old authors and those of to-day is simply this: They died, and their works live; our works die and we live—as best we can."

Darby and Joan's Best Friend.

Many a Darby and Joan whose limited income will be increased by five shillings a week from Jan. 1st will be wishing Mr. Asquith "the Compliments of the Season" during the festive cut-and-dried manner of speaking, or, as someone once put it, his "prunes and prisms" air, which tends to chill an audience, some people have got the impression that the Premier does not appreciate joking or merry-making. This is belied, however, by the fact, related to the writer some time ago, that Mr. Asquith went to Earl's Court Exhibition with Mr. Balfour on one occasion, and they dashed down the water-chute together, laughing heartily at the experience. It is almost forty-four years to the day since Mr. Asquith entered the City of London School, of which he was captain in 1869 and 1870. Premier prizes and medals marked each stage of his school career, and in 1870 the future Prime Minister swept the board by gaining the gold medal for general proficiency and good conduct, the classical medal, the prize for English, the Grocers' Scholarship of the school, and the Balliol Scholarship.

The Londoner's Mistake.

The likeness of King Edward to Sir Ernest Cassel forms a topic of conversation whenever the two men are seen together in London society gatherings. The following story which concerns Sir Ernest and a popular young English society favorite is at present going the rounds of London clubs: The young man, who is very well known about London for his high spirits and a familiarity which somehow everyone permits in him, approached, at Ascot this last season, a gentleman whom he saw standing with his back to him, in the paddock. Slapping him on the shoulder, he exclaimed, "Hallo! Windsor Cassel!" (a nickname enjoyed by Sir Ernest on account of his popularity at court). Then the gentleman accosted turned. To his horror, the rash joker saw not Sir Ernest, but somebody quite different. The youth fled on the instant. Later he sought advice of one of the King's friends, and nervously asked, "What am I to do?" The only advice Sir Ernest could give was, "Never let him see your face again!"

Canada's Tobacco Industry.

Canada's share in the production of the Empire's tobacco is not, perhaps, so widely known as in the case of some of the younger branches of the Empire, which have courted a greater extent of publicity than their elder sister. Moreover, the larger part of Canadian-grown tobacco has been used for consumption in the Dominion itself. Export outlets have not been sought for to any extent, but at the recent Montreal convention of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the president, in his opening address, pointed out the possibilities which were in store for Canadian-grown tobacco, and indicated that it would be necessary to look for outlets in other countries in the near future. There can be no doubt that the cultivators of tobacco in Canada are on the threshold of an era of expansion, more particularly as there is now a real regulation of the crop, as well as a greater amount of knowledge of how to grow and handle the leaf.—Standard of Empire.

IMPERIAL GEOGRAPHY.

Effort Is Being Made to Teach Children About Empire.

The Colonial Office of the British Empire has inaugurated a scheme which has for its object the supplying of schools of the Empire with views designed to promote in each part of the Empire accurate knowledge of other parts.

The Canadian end of this laudable enterprise is now under way. The idea was first broached in the old country when Chamberlain was Colonial Secretary, and he naturally regarded it with favor. An influential committee representative of the Colonial Office, Indian Government, Victoria League, and several private and semi-private societies was formed with Lord Meath, the well-known advocate of military training for lads, as chairman. Other members were H. J. MacKinder, at that time director of the School of Economics, London, and Prof. Michael Sadler, the well-known British educationist.

After giving the matter serious consideration the committee decided that instruction of the sort proposed would be best conveyed by accurate and comprehensive views and that if anything really helpful was to be accomplished it could only be by some well systematized plan of action.

First, a start was made in the crown colonies of the east, which undertook to introduce lantern slide teaching about Great Britain in the schools.

The slides were prepared by Mr. MacKinder, reader of geography in Oxford University, and author of "Britain and British Seas." Teachers were prepared to accompany the visual instruction.

Later on the Indian Government took the matter up and instituted lantern slide teaching in every province of that country, lectures being translated into the various languages spoken in India. The West Indies, West Africa and other crown colonies followed suit.

More recently the problem of accurately representing the colonies to the school children of the Mother Country has been taken up and in this connection the great difficulty was the lack of funds.

Fortunately the Princess of Wales became interested in the enterprise, her attention having been drawn to it as the result of a lecture by Mr. MacKinder. Through the efforts of Her Royal Highness, a Princess of Wales' fund of some $20,000 was raised to cover the preliminary cost. It was decided to engage a competent artist, and send him through the whole Empire, one who would apply exactly the same principles of treatment to each country of the Empire. The artist chosen for this important work was A. Hugh Fisher, who first exhibited at the Royal Academy when 20 years of age, and who has studied under the best masters, and is a member of the Royal Society of Painters. Mr. Fisher has already visited many of the crown colonies of the east, and has produced a set of photographs of the regions visited and also color sketches.

A set which will shortly be issued to show the Princess of Wales will be available throughout the Empire at the cost of production.

Mr. Fisher will now spend some time in Canada. He has been here several days planning his campaign. He is going west at once to see the prairie harvest and the Rockies. Then he will come east for the autumn and visit the fruit districts.

While in Ottawa Mr. Fisher met Mr. MacKinder, editor of the series, who is at present in Canada on his own account. Mr. Fisher hopes to produce uniform, coherent sets of views of the whole Empire, which should be used with beneficial effect in the schools of Canada, as well as those of England.

Youthful Organists.

Arthur Edgell, who has been appointed organist at St. Andrew's Church, Holcombe, is only 15 years of age. He has been organist at St. Margaret's, Babington, England, for the past five years, and played the organ at Vobster Church when only nine years of age. The vacancy at St. Margaret's has been filled by the appointment of his sister Beatrice, who is only 13 years old.
