AUTOMATIC FOOTBALL.

Actions of One Player After a Kick in the Head.

"Speaking of queer things in football," said an old player, "I recall a game that was played at Annapolis some years ago between Columbia and the Naval academy teams.

"One of the men on the Columbia team, the quarterback and a very prominent player of the year, started the game in good condition, but after part of the first half he was kicked in the head in one scrimmage. It took some time to get him around, but he suddenly arose and gave a signal. The two teams lined up and play went right on.

"This man went through the game, and no one noticed that anything was wrong with him. When the game was over and the Columbia team was on the way back to New York in the train this player, who had appeared to be in a brown study, suddenly turned to the man next to him and asked, 'Who won the game—what was the score?' and a number of other questions that made it seem as if he hadn't been anywhere near the field of play.

"The players were greatly surprised and thought perhaps the kick in the head had hurt the man so that his mind was affected. Later they learned that he was unable to tell what happened from the moment he got the kick in the head until the time he recovered consciousness, so to speak, on the train.

"His playing of quarterback and his giving of signals had been entirely automatic, or rather, subconscious. That case was referred to frequently in the psychology courses at Columbia, you may well imagine."

Dismark and Music.

Bismarck's utterances regarding music are compiled in a book by Keudell, "Furst und Fürstin Bismarck, Erinnerungen aus den Jahren, 1846-1872." Keudell once saw the man of blood and iron shed tears during a performance of Beethoven's Sonata Appassionata. His favorite composers were Beethoven and Schubert. The only thing he did not like in their works was the variations. These, he said, "do not speak to the heart." Concerning the sonata just referred to he remarked: "This is like the singing and sobbing of a whole human life. If I heard this music often I should always be brave."

Ma Meant Well Anyway.

A young woman overheard an old negroes call to a pickaninny, "Come back, Exy, Exy!" "Excuse me," said the young woman, "but isn't that a queer name for a baby, aunty?" "Dat ain't her full name," explained the old woman, with pride; "dat's jes' de pet name I call fer 'short. Dat chile got a mighty grand name. Her ma picked it out in a medicine book. Yessum, de chile's full name is Ecce-ma."

He is a fool who cannot be angry, but he is a wise man who will not.

TO FIGHT DISEASE

Health Section of Women's Congress Is Formed.

LADY ABERDEEN CONVENOR

Effort Will Be Made by New Standing Committee to Enlist National Sympathy in Campaign for Health—Committee on Laws Drafts Proposals—France May Be the Scene of Next Meeting.

Toronto, June 19.—Last night's meeting of the International Congress of Women in Convocation Hall to discuss questions of public health was an awakening to many who heretofore have given the matter only cursory thought.

In moving a resolution that a standing committee on public health be formed as part of the international council and that national councils be urged to take a similar course, Her Excellency, the Countess of Aberdeen, said:

"My friends of the international council, may it be given to us to pledge the women of the world to this crusade for health, so full of hope, so full of certainty of victory, so blessed in the relief it will bring to suffering humanity."

Her Excellency introduced the subject of the evening by referring to the volume of reports, "The Health of All Nations," which had been edited by Mrs. Ogilvie Gordon, honorary secretary, and commended it to the attention of the delegates.

During the past years, said her excellency, they had been consolidating their energies in the various countries where they had councils, they had been forming councils, collecting information and giving adherence to various principles of progress in which they urged the councils to promote individually and collectively.

It was a question of international concern and which combined action by the nations was of the highest value.

Wherever there is the best undertaking and co-operation between official and voluntary workers, there will be the best work and the most faithful results. Neither can do what is necessary without the other. The official work by itself tends to become red tape and devoid of elasticity, the voluntary by itself generally lacks system and restraint. It must be our earnest endeavor to use our influence to combine both and to help our women workers to train themselves to do their share in both capacities. There is scope enough and to spare for all.

This is work in which all societies and all individuals can and must take part for the common good, and we need no further stimulus than the thought that no more beneficial contribution can be given to the world's happiness and the world's progress than to increase its power of bringing up its children in possession of that perfect health of body and mind which constitutes the truest riches of the nations."

Mrs. Edwin Gray nominated Lady Aberdeen to the convenorship of the new committee, and she was elected. Dr. Blum of Germany, Miss Gough of Australia, Mme. Bernocco of Italy and Dr. Eleanor Brown of Toronto also spoke.

After a round of social gaieties, hours of inspection and committee meetings, the delegates to the fourth quinquennial congress of the National Council of Women, got down to the real business of the congress yesterday morning.

In respect to the suffrage question, Mrs. Gordon said, that when Prime Minister Asquith asked for the opinion of the women recently, he was doing the wisest thing that had ever been done by any member of the Cabinet in England. The suffragettes were also urged to prepare a statement of their rights and go out and teach the women of the world.

France will likely be the next place of meeting for the quinquennial.

At the first meeting of the council, which was held yesterday morning, the delegates from Holland showed their appreciation of the good work done by their president during the last five years by presenting her with a beautifully silver-finished mahogany gavel. The presentation was made by the president from the Netherlands, Miss Baelde, who in a neat and humorous speech, paid great tribute to Lady Aberdeen, both as her leader and as a woman who had the courage of her convictions.

A great deal of controversy was caused when the meeting was asked to pass the minutes of the special meeting held last year in Geneva. This meeting was called to revise the constitution. It was supported by all the delegates, but the American, and was adopted.

Important recommendations were made regarding the law reform by the committee on laws in their report. Their law permit the fathers of illegitimate children be found if possible.

"That women be allowed to be guardians of children."

"Reform and simplification of marriage laws."

"Independence of married women and their property."

"That women be allowed to serve on juries in criminal cases."

"Wider powers of women in administration of state, civil and reform tribunals, as justices of the peace and boards of commerce."

"Votes for women and rights of women to sit as members of Parliament."

"That the nationality of married women be decided."

"The age of consent in seduction cases be raised."

Another important affair that was brought before the board was in connection with the Rhodes' scholarship for men, permitting study in England and the continent for the colonial and the continental students. The council recommended that this should also apply to women students as well, though on a different basis, and that is that they should have a chance with their continental sister students, who were successful in winning the contest.

ART OF ANAGRAMS.

Two Thousand Years Ago Were Juggled Letters in Words.

The art of anagramming is at least two thousand years old, for it was the custom of the ancient Jewish soothsayers to discover words within words for the purpose of their craft, and many an event was foretold by the simple means of an anagram. Then, the Greeks and Romans were fond of the same pastime. In the Middle Ages the craze was at its highest, and in the sixteenth century a French writer composed a poem of over one thousand lines, each one of which contained an anagram.

An author who began his labors just after the death of Queen Elizabeth, wishing to win the favor of James, the first of the Stuart line, hit upon the happy thought of evolving an anagram out of the words "James Stuart," his version being "a just master." But this gentleman was not without rivals, and one of these composed the words, "Claims Arthur's seat" out of "Charles James Stuart." As the King was then very anxious to impress upon the public the fact that he was descended from the ancient kings of England, he was particularly struck by this artful, but wrongful, anagram.

An anagram was once the means of convicting a false prophetess. The lady in question was known as Eleanor Davies, and out of this she made "Reveal, O Daniel!"—there is an "I" too many, and an "s" which is not included, but it sufficed for those days; and this seemed such a remarkable thing to her that when arraigned before the judges she claimed that it proved direct inspiration. The court was in a quandary, until a quick-witted dean took a pen, and wrote what he considered a much better anagram upon her name. By prefixing "dam" (or mother) he obtained "Never so mad a ladie," and it was sufficient to convict the dame.

Anagrams on the names of kings, and princes used to be very popular. When Charles II. came to the throne, a courtier wit took the name "Charles Stuart," and manufactured "Charles' true hearts" out of it. Another imperfect anagram on royalty is "Will choose France's Pearl," made from "Charles, Prince of Wales." The English heir at the time was hesitating between a Spanish and a French wife, hence the aptness of the anagram. Of a warlike queen, whose name was Mary, a poet wrote "Army."

Freak Dress in Paris.

As a rebuke to the Directorate gowns and huge hats women intellectuals of Paris are appearing on the boulevards clothed in all the simplicity of the fifteenth century dresses and in trousers.

Chief among them is Mme. Dieulafoy, who adopted masculine dress for its convenience when accompanying her husband on his archaeological travels, and has retained it ever since. Then there is Mme. de Montfaut, who is a familiar figure in the newspaper world of Paris, with her bowler hat and short bycoat, below which appear the tails of an undercoat.

Prominent among Parisian ladies of letters who dress in the modes of bygone days is Mme. Georgette Leblanc (Mme. Maeterlinck), who has before now appeared at the theatre in a Louise XVI costume—a gown of flowered silk, with pointed bodice, puffed sleeves and voluminous coiffure. As a matter of fact, Mme. Leblanc affects a "Byzantine" fashion. She dresses in this taste with Mme. Edmond de launay, the wife of the Academician, and herself a poet, whose velvet gowns, falling in straight lines from shoulder to hem, with antique girdle, have inspired more than one painter.

Another authoress who affects Byzantine dress is the Baronesse Deslandes, first wife of the Prince de Broglie, who appeared not long ago in American vaudeville, who always attends balls with her hair hanging in unconfined masses down her back. The Countess de Noailles, whose charming verse has caught the antique spirit, also follows the Byzantine fashion.
