

Hearing Restored After Physicians in Toronto and Winnipeg Failed.

Neglected catarrh is the cause of deafness in nine out of every ten cases. When you hear a little buzzing, roaring sound occasionally in your ears you can be sure partial deafness will follow sooner or later, unless Japanese Catarrh Cure is used.

Mr. D. N. Spencer, 11 Colborne Ave., Toronto writes:—"I have been troubled with catarrh and deafness for a number of years, finally I could not converse with any person at a distance. I spent much money on advertised remedies, and doctored with specialists in Toronto and Winnipeg while there three years ago, but my hearing became no better. About a year ago I procured a sample of Japanese Catarrh Cure. I afterwards followed up this treatment as directed, and shortly I found my hearing completely returned and my catarrh is not trouble me now in the least. I can conscientiously recommend it to any person troubled with catarrh or catarrhal deafness. Japanese Catarrh Cure is a valuable, healing made, pleasant to use, and permanently cures catarrh wherever located. Sold by all druggists; or mailed, price, 50 cents, by The Griffiths-Macpherson Co., Limited, 121 Church St. Toronto.

Grandmother's Cold Cream Jar.

A writer in the Germantown Telegraph declares that our grandmothers excelled us in dainty trifles. One of the prettiest ornaments on the dresser was an egg. At first sight it looked exactly like an egg from the pantry, for the shell was unpainted; only as one looked at it, she saw that one end was broken. This eggshell was used as a cold cream jar. When making cold cream, our grandmothers would pour it into an empty shell which had been carefully prepared. After the egg was taken out the shell was washed and sweetened with perfumery, with a few drops left in the bottom. The cold cream was poured in and left to harden. The result was an eggshell full of lovely white cosmetic.

Love of Perfumes.

Perfumes, though still extensively used, are by no means so popular as in ancient times. The orientals, especially, made the freest use of them. Rooms were fumigated with vapors of burning resins, the body was anointed with aromatic qualities mixed with some plant, and scents were worn about the person in gold and silver boxes. Beds, other articles of furniture and garments were perfumed with myrrh, aloes and cinnamon. When entertainments were given, a servant anointed the head of each guest as he seated himself and sprinkled his person with rosewater. The Talmud directs the apportioning of a tenth part of the bride's dowry for purchase of perfumes.

Common soaps destroy the clothes and render the hands liable to eczema.

UNCROWNED QUEENS.

Seven of Them Have Sat Upon the Throne of England—Some Particulars Not Ordinarily Known.

English history shows that there were several queens of England—just seven of them, in fact—who were never crowned.

Margaret of France, the young second wife of Edward I., was obliged to forego all the splendors of such a pageant because her royal husband, forsooth, could not afford the expense of a coronation.

King Henry VIII. took most of his wives without giving them the ceremony of a coronation. But in his case there were so many of them that his course might have been deemed a wise economy. Besides, he spent so much the once he did go in for a queen's coronation, that of Anne Boleyn, that it is small wonder the money fell short for the ladies who succeeded her, Jane Seymour, Anne of Cleves, Catherine Howard and Catherine Parr.

Henrietta Maria, the young and pretty wife of Charles I., went without a coronation not from necessity, but from choice. Being a French princess and a Roman Catholic, she declined to take part in a state function which would oblige her to partake of the sacrament according to the Church of England rites.

Caroline of Brunswick was denied the pleasure of a coronation not for financial reasons nor for religious principles, but because her spouse, George IV., particularly specified that he wouldn't have her share in his honor. When he was crowned, he would not even permit her to be present at Westminster Abbey to see the ceremony. When she tried to get in, she was repulsed and turned away from all the entrances. She went home to die three weeks later of a violent fever, induced by the excitement.

A New Parnell Story.

"Some years ago," writes a correspondent of The Westminster Gazette, "when I was a reporter in the House of Commons, I had a strange experience of the peculiar ways of the late Mr. Parnell. I was coming up from Brighton on the mid-day train to attend my duties. Just as the train was starting Mr. Parnell got into the same compartment, the porter throwing in after him a small portmanteau. We were alone. When Hayward's Heath had been passed, Mr. Parnell, much to my astonishment, proceeded to divest himself of his clothing, even to the extent of changing his shirt, and then to very delicately dress himself in an outfit which he produced from his portmanteau. From first to last he never took the slightest notice of me, or offered a word of apology for such extraordinary behavior. Had I not known the man I should have been tempted to make a few remarks; but I must confess to being somewhat awed in that singular presence.

"The object of the metamorphosis was not so obvious then as it afterwards became. When the hon. member got into the train he was attired in a brown lounge suit; when he alighted at Victoria he appeared in the regulation Parliamentary black coat and striped trousers."

A Hidden Bust.

A sad little romance lately came to light at Windsor, says The Ladies' Field. When the Prince Consort died a bust of him was made, and this was taken everywhere by his widow. At the same time Queen Victoria, desiring to perpetuate the personal appearance of husband and wife at the time of their separation, had a bust made of herself. This was lost sight of by those at court, and there was a tradition at Windsor Castle that, by direction of the Queen, it had been hidden away. The King caused enquiries to be made of an old servant who was on the domestic staff at the time of the Prince Consort's death, and he was able to indicate a place where the bust was hidden. The wall was broken, and the bust—an interesting marble presentment of the Queen's appearance in early middle age—restored to sight.

Southey on Wordsworth.

Of Wordsworth Southey writes in 1808, says Harold S. Scott, in the Atlantic: "He has written a masterly poem called 'The White Doe of Rylston Hall, or the Fate of the Nortons.' The poem is incomparably fine. It would amuse you to hear how he talks of his own production—his entire and intense selfishness exceeds anything you could have conceived. I am more amused at it than offended; not being sufficiently attached to him to feel pain at perceiving his faults, and yet respecting him too much on the average of his qualities to be disgusted. It is so pure and unmixed of passion in him that Ben Jonson would have had him in a play, had he been his contemporary."

Driving a Mill by Sound Waves.

An interesting scientific toy, the action of which is explained by the theory of sound waves, has recently attracted attention in England. Mr. Bergen Davis, having observed that a small cylinder, closed at one end, if placed in a sound wave, will arrange itself perpendicular to the wave and begin to move in the direction of its own axis, arranged four such cylinders on a rotating mill, the closed end of each following the open end of its predecessor, like the cups of an anemometer, and then placed the mill in front of an organ pipe with its axis of rotation perpendicular to the sound wave issuing from the pipe. When the organ was played, the little mill rotated at a high velocity.

THE LATE FIRE!

That caused such damage to our stock and premises when we were making ready for a big Spring display, was very discouraging to us and looked very blue at the time, but the fair treatment accorded us by the Insurance Companies, the letters of encouragement and sympathy from the best houses of Canada, Great Britain and United States that we traded with, and what we appreciate above all, the generous way the buying people of Fredericton and country around attended our great fire sale, making it the biggest ever held in this province. No such crowds ever before assembled under one roof in this part of the country for the purpose of buying goods, and we repeat, that we appreciate that feature above all others, and it has given us renewed energy to go ahead and keep in the lead of all competitors, which we intend to do. Our 4 new remodelled stores are receiving the finishing touches and will be completed in a few days. Our manager Mr. Fickler is now away on a buying mission. He will visit the markets of Montreal, Toronto, and New York for the purpose of securing suitable goods to stock them, and as soon as they arrive we intend to hold a GRAND OPENING, such as has never been held here before. We cannot fix the date, but meantime buyers will find new fresh goods at money saving prices.
