Prince of Wales' Visit to Berlin Arouses No Enthusiasm.

HEARTILY WELCOMED BY THE EMPEROR AND OFFICIALDOM

But the People Did Not Cheer.

Berlin, Jan. 25—The Prince of Wales, who has come to Berlin to represent King Edward at the celebration of the anniversary of the birth of Emperor William, Monday, was received with the greatest ceremony upon his arrival this morning. Emperor William, wearing the uniform of the First Field Dragoons, accompanied by his second son, Prince Wilhelm Eitel-Friedrich; Prince Henry of Prussia, a number of other princes, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, the British ambassador and his staff, and numerous distinguished personages, awaited the arrival of the prince's train on the station platform.

Upon alighting from the train the Prince of Wales who also wore the uniform of the First Royal Dragoons, was greeted by the emperor, who advanced and warmly shook his hand. The station was filled with a brilliantly uniformed guard. The prince and the emperor, side by side, passed down the line of the guard, while the band played the British anthem. The military escort passed in review before the emperor and his royal visitor, who afterward drove in a state carriage to the palace, where they dined with the imperial family.

The crowds on the streets were small, however, and showed little interest. The celebration in honor of the Prince of Wales has been limited to the greatest possible extent owing to the existing Anglophobia.

Berlin, Jan. 26.—Today passed without any disrespect being shown to the Prince of Wales, who arrived here Saturday evening to represent King Edward at the celebration of the anniversary of the birth of Emperor William next Monday. The streets through which the prince was obliged to be driven today, on his way to visit the British ambassador, were without a single British flag.

While receiving the most elaborate attentions from the family of Emperor William and from German officialdom, the Prince of Wales must feel the chilling attitude of the German public. Almost all the newspapers refrain from editorial comment on his visit.

Soon after 1 o'clock Emperor William and the prince drove in a closed carriage to the barracks of the First Royal Dragoons, Queen Victoria's Own. A triumphal archway of evergreens had been erected in front of the porch of the barracks and the regiment was drawn up in parade order. The band played the British anthem, and after the regiment had marched past the Emperor and Prince of Wales, the latter proceeded to the regimental room, where luncheon was served.

The luncheon terminated at 3 o'clock, when Emperor William returned to the castle and the Prince of Wales took a train for Potsdam, there to visit the Duchess of Albany and to lay a wreath upon the tomb of the late Empress Frederick.

In the evening Emperor William and the Empress gave a dinner party to the Prince of Wales in the Elizabeth hall of the castle, at which the British minister, Count Von Waldersee were present.

Emperor William in his speech toasting King Edward at the military luncheon in the barracks of the First Royal Dragoons, touchingly referred to the death of Queen Victoria and adverted to the wonderful colonial tour of the Prince of Wales as exemplifying the greatness of the British empire. He invited the company to drink to the health of the Prince of Wales as the representative of the British army, to which toast the Prince of Wales suitably responded.
