PROFITS FROM FORESTS.

Trees Produce Returns From Otherwise Waste Lands.

The benighted notion is still occasionally encountered that forest preservation means a stoppage of wood cutting and lumbering. That is about as accurate and sensible as it would be to suppose that the cultivation of corn meant that no more corn should be cut and husked. But even among those who know better, and who favor an enlightened forestry system, there is not always a full appreciation of the pecuniary value of cultivated woodland.

A writer in The London Daily Mail takes up this phase of the question effectively. There are in the United Kingdom about 3,000,000 acres of forests. He estimates that there are 7,000,000 acres more of land which is now waste and which could profitably be planted with trees at a cost of $15 an acre, or $105,000,000 in all. With such an area of 10,000,000 acres nearly 150,000 acres could be cut yearly for 70 years before all was cut over, by which time, of course, there would be a 70 years' old growth on the land which was first cut. The writer reckons the minimum value of the product to be $350 an acre in 70 years, making a total revenue of $50,000,000 a year from the 10,000,000 acres. In addition, forests up to 60 years old should yield $200, or $3.75 yearly an acre, for "thinnings," which would mean $37,500,000 for the 10,000,000 acres, raising the total yearly income from that area of forests to $87,500,000, or $8.75 an acre.

That is not a large income from land, though it is more than many farms average. But it would be an income from land which otherwise would yield none at all. There are millions of acres of mountain and swamp in Great Britain which are incapable of being put to any other profitable use. On just that ground of direct returns from systematic tree culture and cutting, therefore, forestry is to be commended. On the other hand, on the ground of the utility of forest areas for the storage of rainfall and the regulation of water flow, such a system is so indispensable that it should be established and maintained on an extensive scale, even if there was not a cent of profit, but an actual loss yearly on each acre.

Uses For Brown Coal.

"The Utilization of Brown Coal" was the subject of a paper read at a meeting of the Society of Chemical Industry, in Melbourne recently by Wykeham Bayly. The author stated that Victoria, more than any other state, was favored with valuable brown coal, the deposits being practically beyond computation. In many respects the deposits were equal in value to those in Germany, which produces nearly 50,000,000 tons of brown coal annually. He had obtained ammonia sulphates and other valuable products from the coal, and found is exceptionally well adapted for making producer gas. By reducing the watery contents 10 to 18 per cent. and using hydraulic pressure, they had made bricquettes, which were superior in calorific value to those manufactured in Germany. He estimated that bricquettes could be manufactured at Morwell on a large scale, and delivered in Melbourne at 13s. 6d. per ton. It was, however, for producer gas purposes that the brown coal in Victoria could be best utilized.

MEMORIAL TO VANCOUVER.

West Proposes to Honor the Name of Explorer of Pacific Coast.

The Vancouver Province deals interestingly with a proposition to place some fitting memorial—as a tribute from British Columbians, and especially from the people of Vancouver—in the church in Surrey, England, in which the eminent navigator, Captain George Vancouver lies buried.

The Province says: "We feel sure that this suggestion will meet with the approval of many of our readers. It is not exactly to our credit that the last resting-place of a man so intimately and so exemplarily connected with our early history should have nothing to mark it beyond the ordinary and customary gravestone that in a frugal and simpler age was placed there by family affection—no more, in fact, than was usually accorded the graves in which 'the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep!'

"We have opened up communication with the rector of the church, in whom, according to English ecclesiastical law, the freehold of the church and churchyard is vested, and who is responsible for the care and upkeep of the fabric. It is proposed to call, as soon as possible, a meeting of the subscribers to the fund, to discuss the form the memorial shall take, so that a definite suggestion from the donors may accompany their gift. Should this proposal meet with public favor it may later come within the bounds of possibility to erect a monument in commemoration of Captain Vancouver in Stanley Park. An obelisk of dignified proportions on Prospect Point, overlooking the narrows up which he sailed more than a century ago on his way to the inlet that he named after Sir Henry Burrard, of the royal navy, would seem to be a suitable memorial. Besides perpetuating the memory of the great navigator it would be an object of interest to visitors and a landmark to those who follow the sea and come up the passage that he dared when its waters were unchartered and unknown. For such a worthy object the co-operation of our school children might be obtained, and we feel sure it would excite a kindred interest to that evoked by the monument they placed in Stanley Park to the memory of the late Queen Victoria."

Tricking the Hospitals.

Sometimes police ambulance drivers have to take people with assumed complaints to the hospitals, against their better diagnosis.

Driver John Egan of Toronto had two of these experiences last week, the second being on Saturday night, when Edward Thwaits hobbled into W. J. Nichol's drug store, 170 East King street, calling for an ambulance because he had slipped and broken his leg.

"Can you pay your hospital bill?" asked Egan.

"No, I have no money. The city's got to look after me."

"I thought so," murmured Egan as his patient used both limbs to climb into the conveyance.

He is slated on the hospital register as "an alcoholic."

Earlier in the week P. C. Egan was called to a corner on Church street. Two frantic phone messages to the effect that a woman was dying, gingered his flight.

He found a well-known character lying on the pavement groaning fearfully with a crowd of sympathetic people around her. Shriek after shriek were let out as she was being lifted to the stretcher. Egan had carried her before and she was shamming; but his suspicions were not received sympathetically by the onlookers. After a thorough examination at the hospital she was commanded by the physician to stop her noise and walk down the corridor. In her towering indignation she walked straight out of the building like an enraged Juno. This was the third time she had done this caper.

Bernier's Successor.

Mr. Noe Chevrier, the Winnipeg merchant, who has been appointed to fill the Manitoba vacancy in the Senate, caused by the death of Senator Thomas A. Bernier, was born at Rigaud, Vaudreuil county, Quebec, in the early fifties, and took his classical training at College Bourget, Rigaud. He then joined his father at Ottawa, where he launched out into commercial life in the clothing business.

After a few prosperous years in business in Ottawa, Mr. Chevrier, with his family, went to Winnipeg in 1871, and was one of the pioneer merchants of the west, starting a clothing and fur store on Main street, which he still maintains. The firm of Chevrier & Sons is one of the largest concerns of the kind in the west, and the senior partner is widely known throughout the western country as a commercial pioneer of high repute, and a man of sound judgment and upright business principles.

Christmas Diplomacy.

Lady—My husband won't wear those shirts I bought him for Christmas. I didn't think he would. And now I'd like to exchange them.

Clerk—For what, madam?

Lady—Well, you might let me look at some lace handkerchiefs and some silver hatpins.—Puck.

His Popularity Explained.

"I don't see what makes that young friend of mine so very popular," said Willie Wishington. "He is in demand for any number of Christmas parties."

"That is very easily explained," answered Miss Cayenne. "He is so nearsighted that he is continually mistaking holly for mistletoe."

Praying Time.

A five-year-old boy on hearing grace asked for the first time at breakfast gravely remarked, "I only say my prayers at night. That is the dangerous time."

Corruption will never want a pretense.—Cato.

LIBELLING THE TOWN.

Medicine Hat People Feel Hot Over Jibes In American Papers.

Medicine Hat has as mild and balmy a climate as any point in the Canadian West. It persistently, however, gets the blame for all the cold weather of the continent. Here is the latest from The Bufialo News after last week's snowstorm:

"After this storm we guess that the American Paragraphers' Institution will know better than to monkey with Medicine Hat."

But the citizens of Medicine Hat should call an indignation meeting and get out an injunction against Judge, of New York. The Judge's rhymester, never having seen pictures of Medicine Hat citizens engaged in a game of baseball in January or picking cucumbers in March, has broken out into the following melody:

MEDICINE HAT.

Oh, there's a spot I wot of where the Arctic winds blow free!
Every week they have a blizzard, and sometimes two or three;
The sun is ever hidden in a semi-frozen sky,
And a snowfall isn't counted less it's thirty-some feet high.
It's the place to wear a bearskin and snowshoes, broad and flat—
Medicine Hat!
Rearing, tearing Medicine Hat.

It's a cold-storage station, many miles from anywhere,
With a weather man, some Injuns, and perhaps a polar bear.
What goes on there in summer, why, no one seems to know,
But there's always something doing when the north winds start to blow;
For here's the place old Winter is sure of standing pat—
Medicine Hat!
Blustering, flustering Medicine Hat!

So watch the weather signals when the sky is overcast,
And if you see the cold-wave flag flying from the mast,
Just read the yellow bulletin and see if it don't state,
"A howling blizzard's coming at a sixty-five-mile gait."
And if you look the message o'er, you'll see it's dated at—
Medicine Hat!
Snowy, blowy Medicine Hat!

TORONTO'S POOR.

Some of Them Visit Many Charitable Organizations at Christmas Time.

Charitable effort for the distribution of Christmas cheer in Toronto is in the hands of many different organizations, each of which is supposed to take care of a different section of the community. For instance, in Christmas week the St. Vincent de Paul Society sees to the well-being of indigent Roman Catholics. The Irish Protestant Benevolent Society extends aid to the poverty stricken ones from the north of Ireland, the Sons of England see that no Englishman is without a Christmas dinner if they can help it, and so on.

In default of a system of organized charity which so many philanthropists advocate, a great many of the pauperized poor have become so in "making the rounds." By telling a tale of woe they manage to secure charity from all the organizations. Of course, at Christmas time no one wishes that even the pauper should fare badly, but it is necessary to keep a sharp eye out for the "ringers" less the really deserving but diffident poor should be robbed of their just share. These "ringers" are chiefly women, and one of them just before Christmas visited the quarters of the Irish Protestant Benevolent Society with a plea for aid.

One of the shrewdest of the committee commenced to question her.

"What denomination do you belong to?" he asked.

"Methodist," was the prompt reply.

"How many sacraments are there in the Methodist church?" said the committee man.

"Seven, sir!" said the woman.

"Run along up to the St. Vincent de Paul Society," said the questioner, who was well aware that only the Church of Rome boasts seven sacraments.
