SELECT STORY.

LOSING AND WINNING.

"Ha! ha! ha!—it'll be such a joke!" —and Richard Strout gave himself an approving wink as he stood before the glass in admiring contemplation of a complicated bow knot, accomplished at the expense of vast mental effort and the crush and ruin of half a dozen cravats.

It was the evening of Mrs. Dazlitt's ball. All Antequam—at least all the fashion of it—would be there, and Mr.
Richard Strout had gotten himself up with special reference to outshining even his own brilliant self. He was to be the escort of Miss Coryphe Wellmet the tip top beauty of Antequam and only daughter of a rich retired banker, who might succumb any day to a benignly providential stroke of apoplexy.

In the race in which the stake was the lady and her fortune, Richard Strout was sure he held the inside track. It was plain, to his eyes, that she was deeply smitten—how could she help it for that matter? wasn't he, the aforesaid Richard, simply irresistible? He hadn't just popped the question yet, but there was plenty of time for that; he would do it in due season, and when he did he had no misgivings as to what would be the answer. Having the fish already hooked, like a true Waltonian he would enjoy playing i awhile.

But what was the joke Mr. Strout was contemplating jointly with the wonderful bow of his cravat? Let him unfold it to Miss Coryphe herself as they meet in her father's front parlor preparatory to starting to the ball.

"See here, Corie," he said touching her elbow with a finger most miraculously gloved; "I've got a little job for you."
"What is it, most noble Dick?"
"To tame a bear."

"Must I begin now?" she asked with a roughish look which seemed to intimate that the subject to be operated on might not be a thousand miles away.

"Ha! ha! ha! laughed Richard, not quite heartily—"present company, you know, is excepted. The particular grizzly on which I would exercise your docile powers, is not here but will be at the ball to-night. You've heard me mention Bruce Danbridge," he began.

"The bore and bookworm?"

"Yes."

"And woman hater!"

"Exactly—how well you remember!"

"A man too bashful to kiss his own mother, I think I've heard you say. Well what of dread specimen of yours?"

"He's visiting some friends here in Antequam, and as I said, will be at Mrs.
Dazlitt's ball to-night."

"And he's your—"

"Bear," added Richard—"you've hit it straight."

"Now, Corie," he continued, "I've laid a wager with Charlie Bruce, an old college mate of Bruce Danbridge's and mine, that if Bruce can be introduced to you, he'll fall in love and propose to you in a fortnight. Won't you help me win?"

"You don't want me to court him, do you?" Coryphe replied, "you know it isn't leap year."

"No; but if you'll let yourself on to play the agreeable, I think I'll stand a chance. I know it is heavy odds, but it proves my confidence in your charms."

"Well, trot out your monster and let me see him," said Coryphe, buttoning the dozenth button on her right glove, which completed her preparations for departure.

Mrs. Dazlitt's spacious parlors were already crammed when the fair Coryphe entered with her bear. The belle of Antequam never appeared to better advantage; and Richard Strout's heart swelled with pride at the consuming envy gleaming from the circle of masculine eyes of which he and his beautiful companion were the centre.

"I see him now," whispered Richard, when they had paid their debts to the mistress of the mansion; let me bring him at once, that no time may be lost."

"Miss Wellmet, Mr. Danbridge," said Richard, returning and presenting a tall and singularly handsome gentleman, who colored deeply, but in spite of his confusion, he did say the right thing without a bit of awkwardness.

Richard slipped away and left the two together. A set was forming for a dance, Bruce Danbridge could do no less than ask the lady to join him in the set.

"I fear, Miss Wellmet, you will find me an indifferent partner," he apologized; "should I make mistakes I must trust to you to set them right."

He did make several mistakes at first, but Coryphe corrected them so pleasantly that his embarrassment was trifling, and soon quite wore off; and, after a few turns, his mathematical head so completely mastered the figure that none would have known but he had taken a "double first" at Monsieur Caricole's Academy.

The quadrille over, Mr. Danbridge led Coryphe to a seat and engaged her in a conversation in which both seemed deeply interested.

"Isn't she doing beautifully?" said Dick, to himself, looking from a distance, and noting the encouraging looks with which Coryphe drew Bruce out, and the brilliant light that shone in the latter's eyes as they met those of his listener.

They had another dance and another talk together longer than the first.

"By George it's going on swimmingly!" Dick mentally ejaculated. "I must manage to have him see her home. At this rate I shall win far inside of time!"

Approaching and casting a meaning look at Coryphe:

"Would you mind if I went home and left you in Mr. Danbridge's care?" he asked. "I—I've been taken with a racking headache. I'm sure, I owe Bruce here no apology for affording him a real pleasure."

Mr. Strout was excused, and, as it almost seemed to him, with thanks.

Next day, when he called to hear Coryphe's report of progress, he was gratified to find that Bruce Danbridge had preceded him. It nearly looked as if his own coming had disturbed a tete-a-tete.

Mr. Strout couldn't help rubbing his hands in silent glee. He made but a brief stay. He was far too shrewd to mar his chance by trenching on the rule that "two's company."

"Isn't she a trump?" he cried, as he walked home exulting.

And day after day, as Richard renewed his visits he found Coryphe and Bruce together. It almost seemed as if it was the same tete-a-tete continued.

"Won't Charlie Bruce and Bruce Dan-bridge," he chuckled, "look a pair of noodles when the one hears his money ginging in my pocket, and I've married Coryphe under the other's nose?"

But business called Richard Strout to the city for a few days. He sent a note to Coryphe, telling her "to keep it up lively," hinting that on his return he should have a secret of his own to disclose, the nature of which she had probably long ago surmised.

Dick and Charlie Bruce had agreed that their wager should be left to Coryphe's decision, for reasons of delicacy, to be communicated secretly; and Dick went away convinced that good news would await his return.

Three days sufficed for his business in the city, and Dick was taking a parting stroll down Broadway to kill the hour till train time.

He stopped suddenly. From the door of a hotel a lady and gentleman came out and were about entering a carriage having a pile of trunks on top.

"Hello, Dick!" cried Bruce Danbridge, on whose arm hung Coryphe, blushing like a rose, "sorry my wife and I didn't see you sooner."

"Your wi—" Dick couldn't finish the word.

"Yes; it was a quiet little affair, you know—no cards—no fuss—and now we are on our way to the steamer for a quiet little wedding trip to Europe. But, by-by, old fellow, time's up."

What it was that Dick muttered, we won't pretend to say. If it was a congratulation it stuck in his throat. Coryphe waved her hand from the carriage window, and Dick turned away with a humbled malediction on the sex.

He had won his bet, but lost the prize he most coveted.

Investigating a boiler after it has exploded is something. It shows a law-dable desire for information on the part of the inspectors. What is really needed is an inspector who will point out the weak spot in a boiler the day before it can explode.

A correspondent asks: "Can a boy leave his father when he is eighteen years old?" If a father is eighteen years old a son is justified in leaving him, because he ought to be by that time be able to take care of himself."

His name was Lynwood. "Get in Lynn," called his father from the buggy.

"All right, sir," replied the embryo paraphraser, "I'll tumble—Lynn."

The people of Mexico City pay so little attention to earthquakes that it really seems a pity to have nature throw away so much ammunition.
