Novel Cure for Neuralgia.
A TENNESSEE PHYSICIAN'S EXPERIMENT WITH ETHER SPRAY.

In the spring of 1869 we had the most severe attack of facial neuralgia which has been our lot to witness in more than eighteen years of practice: for two weeks we had to confine ourselves to a darkened chamber, and the lightest footfall on the floor caused us the most excruciating agony. All the remedies, local, general, regular, and irregular were tried without any abatement of the trouble. One side of our face was terribly swollen, so much so that it was impossible to extract a de-cayed molar, to which we charged all our suffering, and it seemed as if we were destined to shuffle off this mortal coil by exhaustion from pain and want of sleep. We finally concluded to incise the swollen jaw, thinking there was an abscess about the root of the decayed tooth, and as the parts were so extremely sensitive, and, moreover, having a vague dread of chloroform, we thought we would try local anesthesia by evaporating ether on the surface until the part was frozen. Our attendant complied with our instruction, and the spray was turned on.

The first sensation was one of cutting pain, gradually subsiding until when con-gelation took place we felt perfectly easy, and ordered the cutting operation deferred. Then for fifteen hours we slept the sleep of the righteous, and when we awoke found the rubor et tumor, colore, cum colore entirely vanished, and we arose and went about our business; and to this good day, although we carry a perfect cabinet of curious teeth in our mouth, have never had a neuralgic tinge or touch of that "hell o' a disease," a toothache. Well, to be honest about it, we did not at the time give the freezing process any credit for the cure; we thought the attack had about spent its force and was going to act well anyway; and we paid but little attention to the matter for a year or more, when a relative, Capt. Harris, was visiting us, and took a spell of neuralgia, which he had for over a year been periodically afflicted with rarely passing a month without an attack. To give him present ease, for we did not think of any permanent benefit, we tried the spray all along the track of the affected nerve, and until it turned the skin white. The relief was immediate, and, he has since informed me, permanent. Since then we have used it in fifteen or twenty cases with uniform success, never having to make more than two applications, and it came to be a stock remedy.

Now we must confess that all this sounds very much like the story of the superannuated clergyman who accidentally, while in the West Indies, discovered a cure for consumption, only we don't want any one to send a stamp for particulars. Any physician can purchase a hand-ball atomizer for $1.50, and try it.
They may use either rhigolene or ether, and it will only be necessary to let the spray play upon the part until the skin turns white. We promised to offer no theory for its action, but we will venture this opinion: That the intense cold, by the revulsive effect, causes a complete change in the nutrition of the nerve; what this change is we will not at present venture to assert, only hoping that others who have better opportunities will give the matter a trial and fully test it.

MONKEY TRICKS.—An old monkey sat cosily asleep in a snug corner, with a friend nestling against him and indulging likewise in a comfortable snooze. Presently a young sky-lark approached them somewhat timidly, and squatting beside the friend, sat quiet for some seconds, then suddenly, as if possessed by some malicious inspiration, he reached his hand out cautiously behind the slumbering friend, and gave the elderly monkey a whacking box on the ear. He, waking in just wrath, and unsuspecting of the truth—for the culprit was now sham-ming sleep and looked the picture of innocence—flew upon his friend with an indictment for assault, and chivied him with monstrous clamor round and round the cage, while the culprit sat regarding them and jabbering with joy. Some little time after, the performance was repeated; the old monkey and his friend having settled in the corner, and the assault and wrongful punishment occur-ing as before. Once again the trick was tried, but the friend who had twice suffered, was shamming sleep this time, and caught the culprit in the act, and with the help of the old monkey gave him a good drubbing, which indeed he well deserved.

Awful Snakes in Pennsylvania.
CAPTURE OF A TWENTY-FIVE FOOT SERPENT AT BRYN MAWR.

"Oh, yes, there are plenty of big snakes in this neighborhood," said a resident of Bryn Mawr, Philadelphia's fashionable suburb. "The biggest snake ever killed in this part of the country was killed the other day. It was a water snake, and had been frequently seen in Pyle's dam on Mill Creek, near the old Lower Merion Baptist meeting house. Some of the residents shot at this snake, or some other of about the same size, last year, and once when it came near to the shore a crowd attacked it with long poles, and such other weapons as they could improvise, but the monster flapped his tail, winked cunningly at the rustics with his larboard eye, and in a moment was out of sight.
At the spot where he went down the water was white with foam, caused by the lashing of his tail, and little wavelets rolled over the surface of the lake as if an inland storm was raging. From that time a watch was kept on the lake, but the big water snake failed to put in an appearance until very recently.

"The Harrison Flour Mills, located near the lake inhabited by this big snake, are owned by the Messrs. Pyle. The dam which supplies them with water is about an acre in extent, and is quite deep. The race which conveys the water from the dam to the mill wheel is also deep. On Monday last, while the Pyles were at work at the mill, the wheel suddenly began to slow up, and soon, in spite of the heavy flow of water, stopped altogether, and the large gate was raised several inches. Mr. Pyle raised the trap door in the mill, and descended to the wheel to ascertain the cause of stoppage. Tangled in the wheel, wriggling, squirming and struggling, was a large snake, evidently the denizen of the dam for whom such long watches had been kept. The mill-wheel is a strong one, but the struggles of the snake for liberty and an escape from the agony it endured were plainly weakening it. Mr. Pyle seized a icehook which was fortunately close at hand, and plunging it into the body of the snake, hauled it out of the wheel and pinned it to the floor. The reptile had evidently received severe wounds prior to its capture, and was greatly weakened, or probably Mr. Pyle would not have secured so easy a victory. Long after the capture the animal squirmed and struggled violently, and was not finally despatched until young Mr. Pyle brought a heavy fire shovel, with which he smashed his head.
While the snake was pinned to the floor the pet cat of the mill, moved probably by curiosity, approached it closely, and barely escaped being engulfed in its wide opened mouth. The head of the snake died soon after the blows of the shovel were administered, but the body, as is usual, it is said, with all snakes, retained life until sundown. When measured the ophidian proved to be twenty feet long and twenty-four inches in circumference at the biggest part. It was the biggest snake ever killed in the vicinity of Bryn Mawr."

Guand's Two Wives.
DWELLING AMICABLY WITH THEIR JOINT HIS-BAND AND EIGHTEEN CHILDREN

A miserable little hovel on the banks of the Delaware at South Chester is the residence of Frank Guand, who has for years lived there undisturbed, with two wives and eighteen children. The two wives are sisters. Each owns half the children, performs half the household duties, and does half the scolding. About 1860 Guand met the two sisters, Caroline and Hannah Likens, who lived near Chester. They are of German-English extraction, but were born in this country.
In 1867 the marriage ceremony was performed between him and Caroline. A certificate of marriage between him and Hannah can also be produced. The two families always agree remarkably well.
Hannah works with her eldest daughter in a cotton mill. Their earnings are all put together to keep up the establishment.

One day last week an amusing scene was enacted in the little house. The supper table had been spread and the score or so of young folks collected, counted, and placed at the table. Guand detected a cinder in the large pot in which the soup had been boiled. He jumped up and swore that if his two wives did not behave themselves better he would bring in some one who would care for him. The wives wept at this threat.
This is said to be a threat of frequent occurrence.

The most remarkable combination of
