An Editor's Troubles.

A DISCUSSION ON THE FASHIONS—THE KIND OF QUESTIONS AN EDITOR IS SUPPOSED TO ANSWER.

"Is the gentleman who knows everything in?" stammered a vision of golden hair and sea blue eyes, as she stood before the managing editor's desk yesterday afternoon.

"Everything about what?" asked the editor clawing about under the table for his shoes and trying to hide his stocking feet under him. "Upon what particular r branch do you seek information?"

"I don't exactly know what to do," pouted the strawberry lips. "Pa says I can have only one dress this spring, and I don't know how to have it made up. I thought the gentleman who answers questions could tell me."

"H'm!" muttered the managing editor.

"He has gone up in Maine to find out why geese walk in single file. An 'Anxious Inquirer' wants to know. What kind of a dress had you thought of getting?"

"That's what I want to know, I want something that looks well in terra cotta gloves."

"Yes, yes," murmured the editor.
"Then you should get one of these green things with beads that turn all kinds of colors, and some fringe and fixings of that kind."

"Would you have it cut princess or wear it with a polonaise?" she inquired, looking at him searchingly.

"You — you might have it princess around the neck and a row of polonaises at the bottom," suggested the editor.

"That's going to be fashionable, and a couple of hip pockets would set it off royally."

"I don't know," murmured the beauty;
"I haven't seen any of that style. Do you know whether panniers are worn bouffant this season, or whether the skirt is tight?"

"Oh, certainly, they are made with all the bouffants you can get on them. Some have even sixteen button bouffants, and there was a lady in here yesterday who had a pannier that came clean up to her neck. I should have it pretty bouffant if it was my dress."

"Well, would you box plait the skirt or shirr it?"

"Shirr, if by all means. Shirr it straight up and down, and fasten it with these loops of black tape."

"You mean frogs?"

"No, no. Those big loops that slip over two buttons. That sets off the shirrs, and gives a sort of tout to the ensemble," and the editor leaned back and smiled.

"Don't you think revers of a lighter shade would look pretty?"

"They'll do to fix up the back, but not the front. Revers are very well to trim a hat, but they don't set off a dress front."

"How would you have the corsage?"

"I wouldn't have any at all. You would look much better without one."

"Sir!" she exclaimed, rising.

"Oh, if you insist, you must have a small one, certainly not over three inches long, for short dresses are the style now."

"You—you don't seem to understand," she commenced.

"Oh, don't I?" he retorted. "That's what I'm here for. I think there is nothing so lamentable as to see a young lady dragging her corsage through the mud and dust. Still, if you want one, you shall have it, so you can take it off when you go on the street and only wear it at home. They are hard to handle and not one woman in a hundred can kick her corsage gracefully."

"I—I am much obliged to you," she murmured. "You are very good, I'm sure."

"Don't mention it," replied the editor politely, "I think when you get it shirred and reversed and polonaised and prin-cessed, you'll like it very much. You might get a sash and some big buttons to put on behind, or if you'd like another style better, you might trim the whole front with bouffants and wear the pannier for a hat."

"Oh, thank you, sir?" exclaimed the blushing bud, as she scuttled down stairs.

"Swipes!" roared the managing editor, with a complacent smile and a glance of approval at himself in the glass, "Swipes, you may tell the foreman to send me a proof of the Fashion Notes as soon as they come in. I have observed that a great many errors have crept in lately."

A lad at Cambridge, England, was sentenced to three months imprisonment for stealing a rose-bud from a garden the other day.

She Was Too Explicit.

THE TROUBLE THAT OCCURRED IN THE BREEZY FAMILY—NOT GIVEN TO GAMES OF CHANCE.

"I believe you are opposed to games of chance, Mr. Breezy," said Mrs. Breezy, helping herself to the fried potatoes and making a vigorous attack upon the steak.

"Yes, dear," said Mr. Breezy, hurriedly swallowing his coffee and glancing at his watch.

"You think poker and all games played for money are pernicious?" said Mrs. Breezy.

"I do," said Mr. Breezy, folding up his napkin and again consulting his watch.

"You needn't be looking at your watch in that way," said Mrs. Breezy; "I have something to say to you."

"But, my dear, I have an engagement this morning at nine, and it is now—"

"The engagement will keep," said Mrs.
Breezy; "so keep your seat and listen."

"But, my dear, it is a matter of importance. One of my clients, and one of my best clients, is even now waiting—"

"Let him wait," said Mrs. Breezy;
"I'm sure you have to wait long enough to get your money out of them, and it will do him good."

"But the court meets at ten, and we wish to examine some papers before—"

"Oh, of course," said Mrs. Breezy, cutting vigorously into the steak. "I never knew you without at least half a dozen excuses to back up against each other, if I happened to call upon your time. But the court, the client and everything else can wait this morning, for you must listen to what I have to say."

"Well, stave ahead," said Mr. Breezy, falling back into his chair resignedly.

"As I said, you are opposed to games of chance," said Mrs. Breezy; "you never bet a cent on a card in your life, and you think it ruinous to do so. In fact, you hardly know the name of one card from another. You great innocent man," and Mrs. Breezy laughed a bitter little vexatious laugh, as she jammed her knife into the butter.

"No," said Mr. Breezy, half suspecting what was coming and wondering whether any of the boys had been giving things away to the old lady.

"You couldn't tell an ace from a king, could you, Mr. Breezy? You don't know a flush from one pair, and you wouldn't know enough to be on four of a kind, or stand pat on a full. "Oh, no, you are too innocent to live, Mr. Breezy."

"But, my dear—"

"Oh, don't dear me," said Mrs. Breezy, drumming on the table with her fork.

"If you held a royal flush you'd be just as apt to throw it away as to hold on to it.
Oh, no, you don't know anything about cards, but perhaps you'll tell me how these horrid things got into your coat pocket," and Mrs. Breezy threw a lot of round blue ivory disks upon the table.

"Give it up," said Mr. Breezy, gazing confusedly upon the chips. "But, my dear, you seem to be pretty well posted in the terms of the game yourself. Of course, you never—"

"I!" said Mrs. Breezy, blushing to the roots of her hair. "How could you think?
Oh, this is scandalous," but she blushed deeper than ever as she threw down another handful of ivories and left the diningroom, and the subject of poker was dropped forever in the Breezy family.

A Bootless Errand.

A good story is told of Peragallo, one of the managers of the Society of Authors and Composers, who died but a little while ago.

Once upon a time a dramatist, since become famous, called upon him and announced:

"Well, old fellow, I'm going to read my new piece to Dejazet."

"Delighted to hear it! Wish you luck!"

"Thanks. Here is the notice to be on hand, you see, but I'm in a fix. Look at my boots. I couldn't venture to show myself before the company with such boots as those."

"You are right. Here are twenty-five francs to get a new pair with."

The author receives the money gratefully and hurries away.

A little while later Peragallo finds a parcel in a chair, opens it and discovers a pair of new boots. The author had changed his foot gear on the stairway, so as to touch the managers heart.

Presently the author comes hurrying back. "I say, Peragallo, did I leave a parcel here?"

"There it is, my son. And the next time you come to me for a loan, you'll come on a bootless errand?"
