Annual Educational Services

IN THE METHODIST CHURCH—SERMON BY THE REV. W. W. BREWER—ADDRESS BY THE REV. JOHN READ.

The annual educational services were held in the Methodist Church yesterday morning and evening. In the morning the Rev. W. W. Brewer, of Marysville, preached the annual sermon, taking for his text the 10th and 11th verses of the 2nd chapter of Proverbs:—

"When wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul; Discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee."

Education, said the Rev. gentleman in opening his discourse, had become a theme so trite, that he feared the mere mention of it would cause a lack of that interest which was usually shown by the congregation; but all would agree with him that no apology was needed on the occasion of this annual discussion of education. In dealing with his subject he would first take a general view of it and then would make special mention of it in regard to the church's duty. The teacher is a general and outlines his position on a blackboard. One of his chief weapons is a piece of chalk. The schools of a nation are its centres of power—its thought producers and brain developers—and fountains of knowledge. The earliest education is, of course, that of the family. The schools of the priesthood came next in order, for in the early ages the schools were chiefly ecclesiastical. The Protestant Reformation introduced the idea of educating the masses of the people, and Martin Luther laid the foundation of the school system of Germany, where the poorest child receives the best education the country affords. Our own system is, perhaps, not as perfect. No nation is safe where the masses of the people are uneducated, and this may be the cause of part of the troubles in Ireland to-day. Ignorance is the mother of superstition and a great many other evils. Superstition precludes investigation, and where there is no investigation there is no progress. Despotism and tyranny alone exist where the people are illiterate, and do not understand their own rights. Education and liberty go hand in hand. Rome was once free and great, and from Gaul and Britain to the remotest plains of Asia her conquering legions marched. She was then educated. Eloquence lingered upon her lips and her poetry dropped as softly as the kisses of love. National liberty has kept pace with national education. Educated John Hampden raised his voice alone against the royal right of taxation, and at his voice ten thousand swords flashed in the air and ten thousand men said, "We will have our rights." The signers of the Declaration of Independence were classical scholars and educated men. The decree has gone forth that man shall be educated and enlightened and it shall not be revoked. Vain is everything else; they shall be swept away. Our public schools are a source of intellectual sunlight; and they are shedding these rays of light upon thousands of young minds and giving them knowledge to act well such part as may become their station in life. It becomes our citizens to guard well their interests—to guard well this light and lighthouse. They should resist anything that would tamper or interfere with it or any use that it might be put to for the purpose of securing political or ecclesiastical ends. Then came the view of the moral power of our schools and over this point there was much angry discussion. He had read the school law and the course of instruction carefully, and he could say that our public schools were bulwarks of national strength. They are not sectarian or denominational, but give a high code of morality and a proper reverence for things holy. The Lord's prayer is heard in our schools. You, as a protestant, would not like to have your children go to a school taught by a Roman Catholic, and of course you cannot expect that they would like to have their children taught by a Protestant teacher, where he would receive a training in the principles of that religion. The Rev. gentleman then paid a tribute to our public schools, coupling with it a graceful and complimentary reference to the ability and care of the teachers, and said that the school system was an ornament to and the preserver and benefactor, morally and intellectually, of the country. Speaking with regard to the Methodist Church he said her duty was to give a good education to her best lives. Every minister requires a special education and therefore a college was needed. It was necessary that they should keep up with the times and the advance of science and knowledge, in order that the church might obtain any advantage to be derived from them. Great advances had been made lately, and Christianity and knowledge should always go hand in hand. To do this the ministers of the church must have an acquaintance with and discipline in the ways of knowledge. A church which has no educational institution must send their young minds to those of some other denomination, and in the next generation they will find that their children have gone over to that church, as a result. The Apostles were educated men. They received instruction from Christ for three years, and by a miracle he made them classical scholars. There are some who say that knowledge perverts the ministry, and that when the church becomes learned she falls into error. They instance this and that prominent man and his saying and doing such and such a thing. This is all nonsense; and the error of ignorance, in thus imputing all the error to the learned, was but an evidence of the error of ignorance. Touching upon self-education, he asked: Who is the self-educated man? It is he of noble spirit, who, in defiance of opposition and difficulty, mounts with fearless and untiring foot the rugged heights of learning, and who often reaches an eminence where a diploma may be scorned and a parchment torn to bits and cast to the winds. You have in your present pastor a grand example of this masterful course; a son is he worthy of Wesley—worthy of our Methodism which was born and baptised within Oxford's classic walls. Granting, however, that a man may educate himself, how many would care to do so? Not one in twenty. The rev. gentleman spoke in general but warm terms of the great work done by the only Methodist educational institution in the Province, the Mount Allison Wesleyan College and Academy at Sackville, which had sent out many good and great men into the world. Some of them had gone into the ministry and many others had taken prominent positions in secular life. He saw in church to-day one of Sackville's earliest scholars, who had long upheld the law in this city and was a terror to evil doers. What is lacking is a generous appreciation of this work and the benefits which the college is bestowing upon Methodism and the Province at large. We should say to the great faculty at Sackville: "Go on, and we will stand by you." This would send them at their work refreshed, and would result in good for the church and country. In concluding the rev gentleman made a direct appeal to his hearers to help the cause of education.

In the evening the Rev John Read, of Queen's Square Methodist Church, St John, one of the Conference delegates, addressed the congregation.

On motion of Coun McLaughlan, seconded by Coun Belyea, the Finance Committee were instructed to wait upon the Police Magistrate and learn if he will pay over fines collected under the Canada Temperance Act, providing the town indemnifies him against loss. In case the Police Magistrate does not content to do so, then the committee to agree with two Justices of the Peace, and instruct the Marshal to lay all complaints under said Act before said Justices.
