

FREDERICTON, DECEMBER 4, 1881

myself as other than a cowardly villain: "I bring the bag of gold which—" and then muttered something about having just seen the notice.

"It is too late!" she whispered sadly. "For whom that money was destined to be longer living. Here he lies. He died some hours ago. Yesterday you could have saved him—saved us both—but now it is late, too late!"

And she went on murmuring to herself "Too late!" as if she had fallen into a heartrending stupor.

Suddenly the poor woman rose slowly from the chair where she sat by the death bed, and after walking up and staring at me, gave a hollow cry, which thrilled me to the marrow of my bones.

"It is only right that you should know what you have to answer for," she said. "That is your work. You can be proud of it; it has been a complete success."

She laughed wildly—it was more a mingling of laughing and crying—and looked at me.

"He was my husband," she went on after a time. "We lived apart, why and wherefore is nothing to you. For three years I heard nothing of him. During this time I lived out as governess, and earned that money which you hold in your hand. May God forgive you for what you have done!"

Here she had a severe fit of coughing, and when she took the handkerchief from her mouth it was wet with fresh blood. The hectic flush on her cheeks burned deeper than before, and I could plainly see that she had not long to live in this world.

"At last he found me," she continued weakly, "and wrote, begging me to come to him. I came. He lived in this hole in sickness and poverty. Had I not lost my gold then, I would have taken him away and care well for him. He died of hunger. We have had no food for the last three days, and there is no other fate for me but to follow him. Oh, you have done a manly deed! I am a better woman now!"

She drew a cloth from the face of the corpse; it looked almost a skeleton, and the sorrow of the sight overpowered her. She threw herself over it, and sobbed violently. This emotion brought on another fit of coughing with a frightful torrent of blood, during which she expired. Her disease had gone too far for her to survive the shock of her husband's death, and if she could not die in his arms she died by his side.

Terrified I spread the sheet over the two dead forms, and hurried to call the landlady. I still held the gold in my hand. It seemed to burn like fire, and I would have hurled it from me if I had not a duty to fulfil. The landlady was very indifferent about the fate of the unfortunate pair. She merely said that nothing different had been expected, but she was much pleased when I asked what they owed and proceeded to pay her.

I went to an undertaker and arranged with him for a fitting funeral for the couple united in death. I could not and would not seek for their friends and relatives to draw suspicion upon myself. It was now clear to me why the advertisement for the loss of the money appeared but once. The poor souls had not the means to pay for a repetition.

I followed the coffins to the grave. No stone marks it, but I know it will, and it often follows me in my dreams.

The very same day I drove to the hospital for consumptives, and put the rest of the bag of gold in the collection box, for I would rather have died of hunger than have kept a penny.

A great scandal was caused in Cornwall a few months ago by the elopement of a young lady, the daughter of a gentleman well known in the country, with her father's groom. They fled to South Africa, and last week letters were announcing that the damsel, having lost her illusions as completely as Aurora Floyd, is on her way home, having left her companion in an hotel at Natal, where he has been engaged as waiter.

A story often told in Somersetshire is worthy of being bracketed with the above. Four clergymen assembled in the church of a departed Vicar, to act as pall-bearers at his funeral. When the service was about to commence, it was discovered that the grave was too small, and as a considerable delay was inevitable, the mourners adjourned to the Vicarage-house, while the reverend pall-bearers remained with the coffin, which had been set down in the chancel. When the sexton presently arrived to announce that all was ready, he found them absorbed in a rubber of whist, the coffin being used as a card-table.

Every one should be charitable in judgment. "She is insupportable," said Talleyrand. Then learning he had gone too far, he added, "But it is her only defect."
