A short distance further along his brother was thrown out on his back very badly hurt. The injuries of both were serious and they will be laid up for some time. The horse which was one of a Hackney pair recently bought by R. F. Kinnear in Montreal was caught after making a circuit of the town, being slightly injured and the carriage damaged.

MILLITARY MARCH OUT

The brigade church parade yesterday afternoon was one of the largest and best ordered of the kind seen here in recent years. Practically the entire military strength of the city was out, the marching showed evidence of conscientious drill, and the complimentary comment by the public was not undeserved.

For fully an hour before the appearance of the troops, Charlotte and King streets were lined with civilians, ranks deep. About 3.30 o'clock distant music was heard band music. The soldiers were coming. Nearer and clearer sounded the triumphant symphony. Soon would be seen the vivid sections swinging along rank behind rank and soon be heard the measured tramp of the community's best and bravest.

They came in sight, stacked arms at the head of King street, and began devotional exercises. They were warriors, but differing slightly from those who were expected. They belonged to the army of salvation, and warred against a spiritual rather than material foe.

When the brigade parade finally appeared the time was about 4 o'clock. Nearly 700 men were in line, and the procession was headed by the Artillery Band, followed by Col. G. R. White, D. O. C., and staff, the 3rd Regiment, Canadian Artillery, and officers of the retired and reserved lists.

Then followed the army medical corps, Canadian Army Service Corps, signalling and ordnance corps, cadet companies of St. Luke's, St. John's and Trinity churches. Attached to the medical corps was the St. David's church company.

The 62nd Fusiliers, headed by the bands, made up the remainder of the turnout. On the barrack square, the brigade formed up under command of Col. H. H. McLean, brigadier, and inspected by the D. O. C., after which the brigade marched off to Trinity church by way of Broad, Charlotte, King and Germain streets.

Spacious Trinity was filled, but not solely by the militia. Space had been reserved for the officers' families and besides a few pews were set aside for the accommodation of the general public.

Canon Richardson, 62nd Regiment chaplain, preached.

HOLM AND TOBIN

The deputy chief announced that he had the key and would retain it. The prisoners were then sent below.

THE EARLY FLY.

The early fly has just arrived,
But no one seems to welcome him.
The disposition seems to be,
Instead, to tear him limb from limb.
He buzzes cheerfully around,
As sociable as he can be,
But no one greets him with a smile
Or shows the slightest sign of glee.

The early fly must think our hearts
Are very hard and cold indeed,
His own heart, if he's sensitive
At all, at times must really bleed,
To think that he's been gone so long,
And no one glad to see him back;
To find whene'er he comes around,
His only greeting is a whack?
—Somerville Journal.

On Wednesday evening, in the Germain street Baptist church, there will be selections from the oratorios by Mrs. Freeze, Prof. Titus, G. S. Mayes and S. J. McGowan, after which the sacred cantata, The Ruler's Daughter, will be sung by a large choir accompanied by piano, organ and orchestra. Mr. Mayes will sing "Arm, Arm, ye Brave," from Judas Maccabaeus, by Handel. Great interest is being manifested in this event and there will be a very large audience present. Doors will be opened at 7.30.

ST. JOHN GIRL DUPED BY SMOOTH YANKEE FAKIR

F. Warren Wiggins, Known Here as Campbell, Wooed Her and Skipped After He Got Her Money---He Was Already Married in Maine.

BANGOR, Me., May 26. — The discovery here that a certificate of divorce had been tampered with has upset a romance and opened the eyes of a keen business woman to the deceptive character of her intended husband.

Clerk of Courts Charles F. Sweet of Bangor this morning found that the decree of divorce granted to F. Warren C. Wiggin of South Framingham, Mass., from Georgie Wiggin of Levant, Me., by Justice Whitehouse at the April term of the Maine supreme court had been changed by the addition of the words: "And it is further decreed that the said F. Warren Wiggin be allowed to change his name to F. Warren Campbell." While the decree was written with a pen the words added were put in with a typewriter.

A woman of St. John, N. B., who is a buyer for a large mercantile establishment, was engaged to be married to Wiggin. The authorities withhold her name owing to the prominence of her family. She became acquainted with Wiggin three or four years ago, when he was in St. John as a book agent. Shortly after they became engaged, he prevailed upon her to set him up in business in St. John. Soon after she had thus favored him, a stranger came along who knew Wiggin, and divulged the unpleasant fact that he had a wife and two children, and that he had no right to the name of Campbell, by which he was known in St. John.

When confronted with the information by his fiancee Wiggin admitted that it was true, but told a hard luck story and begged to be forgiven. The business was turned over to his fiancee, but she told him that if he would get a divorce and have his name changed to Campbell, so St. John people would not know of the unpleasant circumstances, she would marry him. So Wiggin went to South Framingham and started proceedings which resulted in his obtaining a divorce. After a while his fiancee received the certificate, with the added provision that he should thereafter be Mr. Campbell. But the former deception had not altogether passed out of the lady's mind, and she came to Bangor to make sure of the validity of the decree, arriving here Wednesday. Clerk Sweet recognized the certificate as one which he issued, but declared the clause about changing the name a forgery.

Although the crime is a serious one, it is doubtful if under the laws and circumstances a prosecution can successfully be brought. While the forgery probably was committed in the United States, it was uttered in St. John. The courts where it was committed have no jurisdiction, and County Attorney Patten says that those in New Brunswick would have little, though they might possibly prosecute Wiggin.

Fifteen or twenty years ago Wiggin was a well-known school teacher in Penobscot county. He married a school teacher of Levant, and the last known of him in these parts until he applied for the divorce, was about a dozen years ago, when he disappeared, deserting his wife, it is alleged.

His Career in St. John.

Most St. John people will remember the man mentioned in the above despatch. He was known in St. John as Campbell. He came here about two years ago accompanied by a man named Moore and for some time they worked as canvassers for Collier's Weekly. Campbell boarded at the Lansdowne Hotel on King square for about six months when he left at the request of the proprietor, and went to the American House. He was only there a short time, when he again changed his residence, going to Mr. Cosman's on King street East, where he remained until his abrupt departure from the city at the time of his failure in the grocery business. It is said that he talked of starting a hotel here and in this connection tried to get his fiancee to put up the money. However, this scheme having fallen through, he secured the grocery business on Germain street, formerly conducted by William Rankin, his fiancee supplying the cash. His career as a grocer was not of long duration, however, for one day he was missing and a number of creditors were losers thereby. The lady whose money had been used in the business then took over the store and straightened matters out and after running the store for a short time she sold out. Since which time she has been residing with a half-brother in the North End.

It is stated that when Campbell left his boarding house he left most of his wardrobe behind, saying he would return in a few days. However, up to date he has not shown up and the clothes still await their owner. It is also said that preparations for his wedding here were so far advanced that his wedding suit was made and hanging in a well-known tailor shop at the time of his departure.

Mr. Campbell was quite a prominent church worker and took a leading part in the services of one of the up-town churches.

His Fiancee Talks

The young lady mentioned above was seen at her home this morning and when asked where Mr. Campbell was now, she said that she believed that on receipt of the communication from his lawyer that the supposed forgery had been discovered, he would go to the farthest corner of the earth, as she could make it a serious matter for him were she so inclined. However, she said nothing further would be done in the matter as far as she was concerned.

She said that she had received a letter and the document from him a short time ago, and that as she had been planning a trip to Bangor for some time, she took the opportunity at the same time of having the document examined, just for her own satisfaction.

She could not understand why he had communicated with her at all, as she had given him to understand that she was through with him when she first discovered his deception.

STRONG SERMON

Rev. Father Owen-Jones Disagrees With the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Rev. Father Owen-Jones, priest in charge of the Mission church of St. John [illegible] strongly disagrees with His [illegible] Archbishop of Canterbury in [illegible] the prayers of the Church at [illegible] tide for a fresh outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

Father Owen-Jones referred to the matter during the course of his sermon at last evening's service. It was strange, he thought that this learned man, placed as he is at the head of the Church we all love so dearly, should advocate such a measure; and he in his position as a humble priest in the Church of God could not agree with him. The reverend gentleman went on to say that there was no need of the Holy Ghost descending again in cloven tongues of fire as on the day of Penticost. The Holy Spirit of God is already in the Church and it only remains for Her children to use it.

Father Owen-Jones reminded his hearers that at their baptisms they received no less a gift than that of the Holy Ghost. Why then, was it necessary that the gift he bestowed upon the Church a second time.

AN OBLIGING EDITOR

In course of the conference held in Washington last year by the American newspaper humorists, some one told the following, declaring that William Allen White was the hero of the story.

One day there strolled into White's sanctum a man who was evidently a politician. He edged confidentially toward White, and slipping a memorandum written by himself under the eyes of the editor, said:

"Say, old man, I'd take it to be a great favor if you'd just manage to put in the paper that I'm in town with my wife, stopping at the Blank Hotel. You might work in something as to my being an eminent Kansan, or words to that effect. Personally, I don't care a hang about this sort of guff; but—well, you know what women are. And I'll take one hundred copies of the paper."

And the eminent Kansan laid before the editor a five-dollar note. Then he took his departure.

The next morning, to his intense amazement and disgust he read in White's paper: "Mr. Richard Dash requests us to say that he, with his wife, is stopping at the Blank Hotel; that he is an eminent Kansan; that he himself cares nothing for newspaper notoriety, but that a society note would be somewhat gratifying to Mrs. Dash. He adds that he will take one hundred copies of the paper for distribution among his friends."
