Kennebeccasis Bay

At a fork in the road about midway between St. Paul's church and the post office, stands the white-washed school house (the white-wash appears to have been laid on with a mop) where the oldest residents of White Head acquired, as the children are acquiring today, the rudiments of their education. They learned to read and write, and got a smattering of geography, history and grammar, just as they do now; the daily sessions were opened with prayer, and scripture reading formed a part of the daily routine, but the prayers and the readings are now, I believe, omitted in the public schools in deference to the jealousy of sects. Were it not so sad, the idea would be humorous, that Christ or his religion had any connection with denominationalism. His teachings are comprehensible by the merest child and he who misinterprtes them to the delusion of others, as I understand the Bible, is "in danger of hell fire." But since the Bible is excluded from the public schools, why not seek instruction in morality, in the right way of living, from some other source? There is that grand old heathen, Seneca, and that other grand old heathen, Marcus Aurelius! Why not make a text book of an abridgment of the "Morals" of the one or the "Meditations" of the other? I will warrant that no sincere disciple of either would ever become a grafter, a hobo or a menace to the security of the community in which he lived, and I believe his life would be a serene and useful one. The absence of moral and technical education in the public schools has contributed largely to make rogues and grafters popular in the United States from a mayor down to the president, and in Canada from a city alderman down to a premier.

I very well remember my first quarter in a public school. I wore skirts. My teacher was Miribah Congdon. Poor Meribah; she was my first sweetheart. She not only heard my lessons; she told me of the beauty of doing right, of the peace that goes with a clear conscience, of the rewards of the exercise of charity toward the erring and the poor, and she kissed me every evening when school was dismissed and every morning when school was opened. I remember her little lectures, so many years ago, better than I remember any sermons I have listened to in the last twenty years. Poor Meribah; she gave up her school to marry a dissipated wretch and died a few years later of a broken heart. Fate plays curious antics with her puppets.

LUNATIC TURNS MURDERER

GENEVA, Ohio, Sept. 25—Wm. A. Harvey, 27 years old living at Hapersfield shot and killed his wife yesterday and then killed himself.

Harvey had been confined in an insane asylum in Cleveland but escaped a few days ago and came home. He was to have been returned to the asylum today.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

THE ST. JOHN STAR IS FOOLING THE PUBLIC

Exposure of Its Special Cable Humbug, of Which It Has the Nerve to Boast Openly to Its Readers.

In its issue of yesterday the St. John Star said:—

"The Star published exclusively on Saturday a couple of columns of cable news of live interest from the old world."

In order to appreciate this statement note the following:—

(Special cable to the St. John Star, Sept. 23.)

LONDON, Sept. 23—Forty-seven years ago a father and mother endeavored unavailingly to find their kidnapped boy. Today that boy, now a man in middle life, is searching anxiously for the parents he has never known. He is advertisingly liberally in the London papers, under the initials of "C. F. M." offering a reward for information regarding his parents.

The known facts of this story of a modern Japhet are as follows:—In 1858 there lived about twenty miles from Manchester a well-to-do landowner and his wife, whose name and exact place of residence are, however, unknown. A son was born to them. When only a few months old the baby boy was taken out by his nurse and neither ever returned. For years the parents searched for the missing boy. No effort was spared to discover his whereabouts. Finally the bereaved parents were compelled to resign themselves to the inevitable. The baby in the meantime was handed over to a sculptor and his wife living in Manchester.

When he was seven years old the sculptor and his family moved to Liverpool, and five years later went to Toronto, Canada, where the boy was educated and started in life. For 34 years he lived there no suspicion ever crossing his mind that the man and woman he loved as his parents were in no way related to him. Finally, with startling and dramatic suddenness he learned the truth. The sculptor, a widower, lay on his death bed. He loved his adopted son, and though he knew he was dying he could not bring himself to break his long silence and inform his son of his true parentage. As the end neared the old man lay motionless on the bed, his hand clasped in the hand of his adopted son. Suddenly he struggled to a sitting posture and gasped out, "You are not my son. You are——"

Then he fell back dead, taking the secret with him to the grave. Now "C. F. M." is unavailingly seeking his parents just as 47 years ago they spared no effort to find him.

(St. John Daily Telegraph, Sept. 15.)

Forty-seven years ago a father and mother endeavored unavailingly to find their kidnapped baby boy. Today that boy, now a man in middle life, is searching anxiously for the parents he has never known.

Such, briefly, says The Dublin Daily Express, is the romantic story concealed behind the following advertisement which appeared in the agony column of Wednesday's Times:—

1858—£2 reward for information as to the whereabouts of the highly respectable parents who so mysteriously lost their infant baby boy about 1858. The son is alive and well. All particulars can be had by making application to C. F. M., 6a Milverton street, Kennington road, S. E., London.

The known facts of this story of a modern Japhet are as follows:—

In 1858 there lived about twenty miles from Manchester, a well-to-do land-owner and his wife, whose name and exact place of residence are, however, unknown. A son was born to them, but when only a few months old the boy was taken out by his nurse and neither returned.

For years the parents searched for the missing boy. No effort was spared to discover his whereabouts, but all failed, and in time the bereaved parents gave up in despair and resigned themselves to a lonely and sorrowful old age.

The baby boy in the meantime had been handed over to a sculptor and his wife who lived at Guardian place, Hyde Road, West Gorton, Manchester. When he was seven years old the family moved to Liverpool, and five years later went to Toronto, Canada, where the boy was educated and started in life.

For thirty-four years he lived in Toronto, no suspicion ever crossed his mind that the man and woman he loved as his parents were in no way related to him. Then, in 1892, with startling and dramatic suddenness, he learned the truth, but not the whole truth, for the death of his supposed father robbed him of that, and made necessary the search which he has since conducted. In that year — 1892—the sculptor, then a widower, lay on his deathbed. He loved his adopted son, and, although he knew he was dying, he could not bring himself to break his long silence and inform his "son" of his true parentage.

For days and weeks the old man lingered on, tended by his adopted son. Then the watchers saw that the end was near. They gathered silently in the sick chamber and waited. The old man lay motionless on the bed, his hand clasped in the hand of his "son." Suddenly he struggled to a sitting posture and gasped out: "You are not my son. You are ——"

Then he fell back dead, taking the secret with him to the grave.

Since then "C. F. M." has unavailingly sought his parents, just as forty-seven years ago they spared no effort to find him.

There lived in Toronto until recent years a Mr. Mowbray, a sculptor, who was an Englishman. He was very highly respected by all who knew him. He did some fine work for firms engaged in business requiring the services of a sculptor. Whether he was the gentleman referred to The Globe could not ascertain.

MINERALS OF ALBERT COUNTY

Something About the Valuable Gypsum Properties Which Have Been Already Developed.

Albert county, is said by geologists to contain the richest, and greatest variet of mineral wealth in the province.

Coal, manganese, lime and gypsum have been and are the most commercially valuable minerals so far developed. There are four different companies operating plaster quarries within a radius of ten miles; three of the quarries are in the parish of Hillsboro and have become important industries.

The best developed and probably the most valuable gypsum deposits are those owned and operated by the Albert Manufacturing Co. at Hillsboro. The company are also developing another quarry at Mardins Head, which promises well. This company have a very valuable plant and every convenience for the successful carrying on of this increasing business, which gives employment to a large number of men the year round.

The rock is taken out by two methods; open quarry work and by mining. At the Sayre quarry all the operations are conducted by tunneling, and a depth of nearly 200 feet has been reached. Large excavations in the solid rock have been made from which tunnels are worked in various directions and at different levels. The product of the mine is brought to the surface by means of cars and a wire rope attached to the drum of a hoisting and pumping engine at the top of the slope. At the Smith quarry extension work is carried on in the same way, with a similar outfit. Two small locomotives are busily employed carrying the product to the mill and to the docks, where a fleet of steamers and sailing vessels come to be loaded with lump and barrel plaster. The manufactured gypsum is used extensively as a puttycoat and makes a beautiful finish for a wall.

At the quarries four different qualities of the rock are sorted, the coarse quality is used as land plaster which is ground, but not calcined and in this state is a valuable addition to the dry, sandy land of the southern states and other places where it is desirable to retain moisture in the land. Some of the white plaster is sawed into blocks and thin slabs, which, after polishing and various designs being cut upon it, while in its natural soft state, is submitted to a chemical process which renders it as hard as marble and it is then used for a great variety of ornamental purposes.

The rock wall plaster manufactured at Hillsboro makes a good durable wall, which is very hard and has many advantages over the ordinary lime mortar. Some beautiful specimens of plain and colored tile work made of this material may be seen in the finishing of the private office of the manager.

The plaster business forms a very important industry for Hillsboro and vicinity, and in all probability will steadily become of increased importance, as there would seem to be an almost inexhaustible quantity of this valuable deposit.
