CRISIS IN GERMAN COLONIAL AFFAIRS

Tales of Revolting Cruelty in Southwest Africa---The Coming Elections Will Have Important Results---The Government Surprised at Action of Reichstag.

(New York Evening Post).

Chancellor Von Bulow was confident, at the beginning of the debate in the Reichstag on the colonial situation, that there was no real public concern about it. Indeed, he was positive that a wicked press was making much of a few beauty spots that detracted very little from the generally fine appearance of the colonies. The answer came quickly, for there followed the most exciting and sensational debate the Reichstag has seen since the tariff discussions of 1903. No such acrimonious scenes would have been possible had not the members, like the press, merely expressed the disgust and alarm of great sections of the people. At first, it seemed as if the smooth words and flattering unction of the chancellor and the aggressive responses of Herr Dernburg, the new director of the colonial bureau, had carried the day for the government. But Herr Dernburg found himself forced to reply to Herr Roren, one of the leaders of the Centre, who had accused Dernburg, among other things, of "bringing the language of stock exchange robbers into the Reichstag;" and though he answered Herr Roren with considerable force, he at the same time threw down the gauntlet to the Centre, upon whose votes the government has long depended for its control of the Reichstag.

Herr Roren expressly stated that in attacking the government he spoke only for himself, not for his party. But it has spoken for him in rejecting, in the appropriations committee, the government's supplementary colonial estimates. Without this money, the field forces in Southwest Africa must be reduced from 8,000 to 2,500 men, a body insufficient to hold in check the warring Hottentots, decimated and nearly starving as they are. Under the circumstances, the chancellor, who thought this talk of a colonial crisis the invention of impertinent newspapers, finds himself compelled to show every card in his hand and threaten the dissolution of the Reichstag. As even this failed today, the extreme step has been taken, and the government is to bring on an election, of which the result must be highly doubtful.

It was confidently hoped that this prosperity would weaken the Socialists; even the Liberals have expected a falling off in Bebel's followers. But the revelations of the colonial debate have put fresh weapons in his hands. The charges made by Herr Roren, on the authority of many missionaries, against certain colonial officials could not be reprinted in the columns of this newspaper, and, though they may have been refuted in part — there are honest and manly officials as well as the other kind—the story of German maladministration is black enough. On the business side, not even Herr Dernburg, accustomed as he is to reorganizing failed banks, could make an attractive showing; his balance sheet was constructed by bookkeeping methods which no conservative banker could endorse. On the moral side, Herr Bebel's attack was more than usually effective. Some of the charges which he cited as being current gossip seem incredible, as when he told of the destruction of every man and woman in a certain village, and the drowning in baskets of their fifty-two surviving children! Some of his other stories even the Berlin newspapers do not reprint; but his demand for their immediate investigation was so irresistible that Dernburg was quick to promise it.

Altogether, there is no more illuminating example of what modern colonialism leads to than that offered by Germany. At home, she has an effective government which "does things," even though hampered by much red tape; is humane in her general tendencies, and wonderfully free from graft and corruption. The plunge into oversea experiments did not occur until the early eighties; the whole story of colonial follies and abuses was then before the Germans, yet they plunged ahead confident, as the United States in 1898, that they were foreordained by reason of their efficiency and adaptability and high civilization to lead the lower races upwards. Twenty-five years have elapsed, and the record shows that the colonies as investments are hopeless failures—"gold-bricks" of the worst kind—costing far more than they will net for centuries to come. Far from adding to the prestige of the country as a world-power, the colonies have been the avenue by which graft and unheard-of administrative scandals have crept into the government—not only that of the empire, but even of Prussia, whose minister of the interior has just been forced to retire because of his connection with certain favored colonial contractors.

So far as the relations of the white men to the blacks are concerned, it is the old story that the former have been pulled down by the latter, or have themselves debased those whom they were sent to uplift. The official who crowned a native favorite as a queen, put a sword in her hand, and constituted her a summary court for the trial of petty offenders, is only one example. But it demonstrates, even in far-off Africa, the truth of Lincoln's assertion, that no man is good enough to have absolute power over another. The possession of such power in the tropics has brutalized those possessing it—and created a new mental disease, Tropenkoller, the Germans call it, upon which all colonizers must reckon. Is it any wonder that many members of the Reichstag talk of throwing it all up in disgust, and are amazed that so shrewd a man as Bismarck could have brought this upon his country? Is it astonishing that the German people as a whole are angered beyond measure that their good name, of which they have so much right to be proud, has been so sadly besmirched?

(Bradstreet's.)

A noteworthy political situation has been brought about in Germany as the result of the refusal of the Reichstag to approve of a colonial appropriation amounting to $7,350,000. As the result the Kaiser has sent a message by the chancellor dissolving the Reichstag. A new Reichstag must be elected within sixty days and must reassemble within ninety days after dissolution. Thesituation is the outgrowth of a dissatisfaction which has been growing steadily for some time with the political course of the Kaiser, and which has finally fixed upon the colonial policy of the government as the point of greatest weakness. The Reichstag, it may be said, merely stood by the report of its budget committee, which rejected the demand of the government a few days before the decisive vote was taken. The outcome of the approaching elections cannot be forecast in view of the situation of German politics at present. That the election will have important results in any event is the belief of those who have given the closest attention to the subject. In Great Britain, in particular, the result of the elections will be awaited with the greatest interest. They will take place in February, and it is expected that they will result in an expression of opinion which will be decisive, whereas the vote in the Reichstag was exceedingly close, there being only 178 votes against as compared with 168 in favor of the grant.

THE CENTENARY OE MRS. OSLER

Asked Cornishmen to Sing "Trelawney" for Her --- Many Relatives Present.

(Mail and Empire.)

The centenary of Mrs. Featherston Osler found her not so well as she had hoped to be. Her home on Wellesley Street was thronged with descendants and relatives, but only immediate relatives were permitted to see her. She remained upstairs, wearing the usual old-fashioned black silk gown immortalized by Whistler in his picture of his mother. Nevertheless, congratulations were conveyed to her by a throng of visitors. Mr. Justice Featherston Osler, the eldest son, made an address, and presented the souvenir spoons and plate designed for the occasion. Dr. William Osler also made a short speech. The magnificent birthday cake which had been prepared, representing the progress of the world since 1806, was cut by Master Phillip Osler, son of H. S. Osler, K. C., as eldest great-grandson of the lady who was being honored.

The home was beautifully decorated with American Beauty roses, carnations, lilies, and hyacinths. Innumerable birthday tributes were received. An especially pretty feature was a table arranged for the great grandchildren. Every device that could be thought of to interest the little ones was present, and it was a genuine Christmas treat for them. After the children were sent home, the sons and grandsons, with their wives, had tea together, the gathering altogether numbering about 60.

At 8 o'clock last night the choir of the Cornishmen's Association serenaded Mrs. Osler (she being a native of Cornwall) with Christmas carols. She listened to them through an open window, and insisted that they come inside and sing more carols. By her own request they sang "Trelawney," which to the native of Cornwall ranks as does "Men of Harlech" with the Welsh and "Scots Wha Hae" with the men north of the Tweed. She said to them, "It's only Cornish folk that can live to be a hundred years old."

The first stanza of the song she requested is as follows:—

"A good sword and a trusty hand,
A merry heart and true;
King James' men shall understand
What Cornish lads can do.
And have they fixed the where and when?
And shall Trelawney die?
Here's twenty thousand Cornishmen
Will know the reason why!"

ROTHESAY LIBERALS

They Met Last Night and Organized for the Next Election.

Rothesay, Dec. 19—A goodly number of Liberal electors met in the Hotel Belleview this evening for the purpose of organization and selecting delegates to represent the parish at the Liberal convention in St. John.

Ora P. King and George G. Scovil, two of the representatives of the county, were present and made interesting addresses, that of the latter being necessarily brief because the speaker had to catch a train for St. John. Mr. Scovil told his hearers that though he had represented the county of Kings for fourteen years this was the first time he had addressed the people of Rothesay. It was his own fault for the people here had always given him a loyal and good support. He was not there to make a political speech but it gave him pleasure to see such an attendance and to observe the unison among the party followers. They must remember that there are many things "we all want that we cannot get and Kings county will have its burden of disappointments as well as many others." Mr. Scovil was warmly received and applauded when he took his seat.

Chairman Gilbert next called upon Ora P. King, M. P. P., who told them that the attorney-general had been called to attend the Supreme Court of Canada and therefore could not be present. After expressing his pleasure at being present and his intention not to make any long political speech, Mr. King touched upon the road law and some agricultural matters.

The road law was a burning question throughout the county and the province and there wasn't any doubt that before the next election it would be discussed thoroughly. There was a campaign on the horizon and a local political fight was inevitable in the near future. One of the questions that would be discussed was the desirability of the new road law. He compared it with the old law which rated a man's work as worth 50 cents a day whereas no man could afford to work for that sum and he would not be employed if that was all he was worth. Upon an assessment of $1,000 he showed that under the old law the tax was $3, which represented six days' work, while the taxes under the new law were $2.20, a saving of eighty cents. Nowadays a man got at least $1.25 for his day's work and working the six days, as he would have to under the old law, his work would be worth $7.50. Quite a difference in favor of the new law.

At first he and some others thought that the best plan was to employ one man for a larger area and pay him salary enough to make it worth his while to devote all his time to it. But he was mistaken. The closer you can get to the people the better every time and by appointing a man for every parish you were closer than one man for three parishes. So after the first of the year there would be one man for every parish in the county of Kings.

He was almost prepared to go further. Now the government appoints the superintendent. In other provinces the municipal councillors appointed them. That was closer still to the people and he would almost favor it, being the more inclined to do so knowing what a great relief it would be to the members. Still the shortness of the municipal term would make the management of the roads more unstable. New councillors might appoint new superintendents and new men have new ways but what he was prepared to say from his fifteen years experience as councillor and legislative member he felt that if they could get the people interested in the roads, get them to take an active, live interest in good roads and the problem of road making was solved.

Auto owners had told him that the roads in Kings county were better than any other in the maritime provinces and better than those in Maine. That was what they wanted. The best is none too good for Kings county because in it are the best farmers, the men who have made their mark in making butter and cheese, who have advanced to cold storage in Sussex and have the best plant east of Ontario. They have stored now sixty tons of butter and 3,000 carcasses of lamb. They have sold 6,000 carcasses which went to Winnipeg.

Mr. King talked of the chances to supply the west, of the possibilities open to the farmers of Kings in sheep raising and trying to raise a better class of horses. He spoke of the value of wool and what would be the gain of an experimental sheep station in the province. He talked earnestly of these doors of development and concluded by saying that when the campaign was on, if selected as a candidate by the convention, he would be glad to address them fully on the questions of the day. The party had nothing to fear. They had a clean record and were anxious to give a detailed account of their stewardship to the people.

There were short speeches from Couns. Gilbert and Gilliland and letters were read by the secretary from Hon. Dr. Pugsley and Hon. A. S. White regretting their inability to attend and afterward the report and recommendations of the nominating committee was read by E. S. Carter, who moved its adoption. Those chosen for officers and executive committee were as follows: Coun. Thomas Gilliland, chairman; Dr. D. A. Pugsley, vice-chairman and treasurer, and E. S. Carter, secretary; A. M. Saunders, S. Z. Dickson, W. S. Saunders, George Green, Chas. Maynes, Jacob Kemp, Abner McFate, Terence McLaughlin and William McLaughlin, executive committee.

The election of delegates to the provincial Liberal convention resulted in the election of Chairman Gilliland, Coun. Gilbert, F. C. Bogart, George Green and William Madill, with James Carpenter and Dr. W. B. McVey as substitutes.

An address by Capt. William Pitt and brief thanks for his election by the new chairman, Coun. Gilliland, prefaced a discussion over the noon train service of the intercolonial from St. John to suburban points. It was finally resolved that the delegates should cooperate with other delegations along the line to point out to the minister of railways why the service at noon was complained of and to suggest such changes as would make an improvement.

The meeting was indebted to Mr. King for the assistance given them in the discussion of several subjects that came up.
