THE SCARLET PIMPERNEL

BY BARONESS ORCZY.

Indeed, she had almost forgotten the devoted friend and companion, who had trusted and stood by her during all these years of anxiety and suffering. She remembered him now, tardily and with a pang of remorse.

"Aye! you had forgotten him, hadn't you, m'love?" said Sir Percy, merrily. "I met him not far from the 'Chat Gris,' before I had that interesting supper party, with my friend Chauvelin. Odd's life! but I have a score to settle with that young reprobate!—but in the meanwhile, I told him of a very long, very roundabout road, that would bring him here by a very circuitous road, which Chauvelin's men would never suspect, just about the time when we are ready for him, eh, little woman?"

"And he obeyed?" asked Marguerite, in utter astonishment.
"Without word or question. See, her he comes. He was not in the way when I did not want him, and now he arrives in the nick of time. Ah! he will make pretty little Suzanne a most admirable and methodical husband."

In the meanwhile Sir Andrew Frouke had cautiously worked his way down the cliffs: he stopped once or twice, pausing to listen for the whispered words, which would guide him to Blakeney's hiding place.

"Blakeney!" he ventured to say at last cautiously. "Blakeney—are you there?"
The next moment he rounded the rock against which Sir Percy and Marguerite were leaning, and seeing the weird figure still clad in the long Jew's gaberdine, he paused in sudden, complete bewilderment.

But already Blakeney had struggled to his feet.
"Here I am, friend," he said with a funny, insane laugh, "all alive! though I do look a beggar scarecrow in these damned things."

"Zooks!" ejaculated Sir Andrew in boundless astonishment as he recognized his leader, "of all the . . ."

The young man had seen Marguerite, and happily checked the forcible language that rose to his lips, at sight of the exquisite Sir Percy in this weird and dirty garb.

"Yes!" said Blakeney, calmly, "of all the . . . hem! . . . My friend—I have not yet had time to ask you what you are doing in France, when I ordered you to remain in London? Insubordination? What? Wait till my shoulders are less sore, and, by Gad, see the punishment you'll get."

"Odd's fish! I'll bear it," said Sir Andrew, with a merry laugh, "seeing that you are alive to give it. Would you have had me allow Lady Blakeney to do the journey all alone? But, in the name of heaven, man, where did you get these extraordinary clothes?"

"Lad! they are a bit quaint, ain't they?" laughed Sir Percy, jovially. "But odd's fish!" he added, with sudden earnestness and authority, "have you seen here Froukes, we must lose no more time, that brute Chauvelin may send some one to look after us."

Marguerite was so happy, she could have stayed here for ever, hearing his voice, asking a hundred questions. But at mention of Chauvelin's name she started in quick alarm, afraid for the dear life she would have died to save.

"But how can we get back?" she gasped; "the roads are full of soldiers between here and Calais, and . . ."

"We are not going back to Calais, sweetheart," he said, "but just the other side of Gris Nez, not half a league from here. The boat of the Day Dream will meet us there."

CITY DREDGES WILL DO WORK AT SAND POINT

Considerable business was transacted at last night's meeting of the board of works. The report of the sub-committee to the effect that the dredging of the Sand Point berths be done by the two dredges now being operated by the city, was adopted.

The agreement between the city, C. P. R., St. John Railway Company and N. B. Southern Railway was recommended to the council for acceptance. A communication from the C. P. R. and Donaldson line asking that a fence be erected around the Sand Point docks was allowed to lie over until the regular meeting of the board. Several other matters were also considered. All the members of the board were present with the exception of Ald. Hamm. Superintendent Downie and Engineer Brown were also at the meeting.

Engineer Brown said he agreed with the director if he was figuring on 80 feet out and going straight up. He got the additional by the slope. His figures would be about 5,600 yards without the slope or practically the same as the director's.

In a discussion as to the difference between the estimates of dredging to be done Engineer Brown stated that his figures agreed with the director's, provided they did not dredge a slope.

The report of the sub-committee was then read, as follows:

To the Chairman of the Board of Public Works:—
The sub-committee appointed by you to investigate the matter of the dredging at Sand Point, with a view to the securing the necessary depth of water at the wharves and for the accommodation of shipping during the coming winter season, has given diligent attention to its duties and now reports as follows:—

The C. P. R. Company informed your committee that the steamers known as the Emmerson require a depth of thirty feet at a depth of eighty feet as a condition to their coming here this winter.

Your committee have full investigation of the director of public works as to what could be done with the dredges at present owned by and under control of and now in use by the city in completing berths 2 and 3 to meet the requirements above stated by the C. P. R. Company, and the director informed your committee that beyond question he can complete the dredging at Nos. 2 and 3 berths to the above depth of thirty feet and width of eighty feet with the said two dredges now in use by the city by the 15th day of November next.

The committee examined closely into the reasons given by the director for his assurance to us that he could so complete the berths by the time above referred to for such completion, and your committee were and are convinced that such assurance are well founded and that such completion of said berths 2 and 3 will be effected in full time to meet the arrival of the first of the Emmersons in the month of November next, which arrival will be not before the 22nd day of November next.

Your committee ask that they be continued as a sub-committee in the matters above referred to with power to further report.

T. H. BULLOCK,
Chairman of Committee.

Ald. Bullock thought the report should be given to the press in its entirety. They should take the public into their confidence fully. It was the better way considering the comments that had been made.

"I am conducting this and any other civic matters as I would my own business," continued Ald. Bullock.

The other side of Gris Nez? But I . . . I cannot walk, Percy," she moaned helplessly, trying to struggle to her tired feet, she found herself unable even to stand.

"I will carry you, dear, he said simply; 'the blind leading the lame, you know.'"
Sir Andrew was ready, too, to help with the precious burden, but Sir Percy would not entrust his beloved to any arms but his own.

"When you and she are both safely on board the Day Dream," he said to his young comrade, "and I feel that Mlle. Suzanne's eyes will not greet me in England with reproachful looks, then it will be my turn to rest."

And his arms still vigorous in spite of fatigue and suffering, closed round Marguerite's poor, weary body, and lifted her as gently as if she had been a feather.

Then, as Sir Andrew discreetly kept out of earshot, there were many things said—or rather whispered—while even the autumn breeze did not catch, for it had gone to rest.

All his fatigue was forgotten; his shoulders must have been very sore, for the soldiers had hit hard, but the man's muscles seemed made of steel, and his energy was almost supernatural. It was a weary tramp, half a league along the stony side of the cliffs, but never for a moment did his courage give way or his muscles yield to fatigue.

On he tramped, with firm footsteps, his vigorous arms encircling the precious burden, and . . . no doubt, as she lay, quiet and happy, at times lulled to momentary drowsiness, at other times watching through the slowly gathering morning light the pleasant face with the lazy, drooping blue eyes, ever cheerful, ever illumined with a goodhumored smile.

Which helped to shorten the weary road, and acted as a soothing balm to his aching sinews.

The many-hued light of dawn was breaking in the east, when at last they reached the creek beyond Gris Nez. The galley lay in wait in answer to a signal from Sir Percy, she drew near, and two sturdy British sailors had the honor of carrying my lady into the boat.

Half an hour later they were on board the Day Dream. The crew, who of necessity were in their master's secrets, and who were devoted to him heart and soul, were not surprised to see him arriving in so extraordinary a disguise.

Armand St. Just and the other fugitives were eagerly awaiting the advent of their brave rescuer; he would not stay to hear the expressions of their gratitude, but he found his way to his private cabin as quickly as he could, leaving Marguerite quite happy in the arms of her brother.

Everything on board the Day Dream was fitted with that exquisite luxury, so dear to Sir Percy Blakeney's heart, and by the time they all landed at Dover he had found time to get into some of the sumptuous clothes which he loved, and of which he always kept a supply on board his yacht.

The difficulty was to provide Marguerite with a pair of shoes, and great was the little middy's joy when my lady found that she could put foot on English shore in his best pair.

The rest is silence—silence and joy for those who had endured so much suffering, yet found at last a great and lasting happiness.

But it is on record that the brilliant wedding of Sir Andrew Froukes, Bart., with Mlle. Suzanne de Tourmay de Basseville, a function at which H. R. H., the Prince of Wales and all the elite of fashion ness, continued Ald. Bullock, "and I have no desire to throw away any of the city's money. Our director is competent to do the work and we are prepared to stand or fall by his statements that the work can be done. A communication will be sent to the minister of public works tomorrow, calling his attention to the need of more dredging necessary in the harbor and of urging Mr. Mayors to greater efforts to have the crib sites ready. A communication will also be sent to Hon. Mr. Emmerson."

The report of the committee was then adopted, Ald. Christie and Baxter voting may.

The agreement between the city, the C. P. R., St. John Railway Company and the N. B. Southern Railway was then discussed. It dealt at length with the widening of Union street, laying of tracks, etc.

Ald. Baxter moved that the agreement with the exception of the section relating to legislation, on the street railway company and N. B. Southern company assent to its being satisfactory, he recommended to the council for acceptance. This was carried.

A resolution was passed requesting the mayor to call the meeting of the council for 8 o'clock this evening instead of in the afternoon, as many members could not attend the afternoon meeting.

A communication was read from Mr. Downie asking that the molasses and other goods stored in the Sand Point warehouses be removed before the opening of the winter's business.

The director was authorized to notify the owners to remove the goods forthwith.

A communication from the Donaldson line and C. P. R. was then read, in which they asked that a fence be placed around the Sand Point docks, to add them in keeping out loafers and sightseers who had no business there and only interfered with the work. It would also aid in preventing stealing from the warehouses.

The matter was allowed to lie over until the regular meeting.

Ald. Bullock advocated having an inspector appointed to keep a lookout on steamers dumping ashes in the harbor.

The chairman said it was well known that the city dredge brought up great quantities of ashes.

Mr. Downie said the steamers should be heavily fined if they were caught dumping ashes.

On the recommendation of Mr. Downie it was decided the watchmen at Sand Point should wear uniforms, and the director was authorized to make arrangements.

On motion of Ald. Willet, it was decided to have the shed used by the jail prisoners moved from Victoria to Dufferin ward.

A motion was passed that the chairman and director be empowered to discuss the reconstruction of Union street with the C. P. R.

The director was authorized to build a retaining wall on North street where a building is being erected by James McDade. The cost is estimated at from $100 to $200.

The board then adjourned.

LONGSHOREMEN'S ASSOCIATION ELECT OFFICERS

The threatened trouble between the Shipping Federation and the 'Longshoremen's Association over the recognition of the latter by the Federation would appear to have been averted, and from the present outlook the steamship companies doing business here during the winter months and the Association will work this season in perfect accord.

At a meeting of the 'Longshoremen's Association held last night, while the question was not officially dealt with, it is understood in an informal discussion on the matter almost the unanimous feeling of the meeting was that things should remain as at present. It will be remembered that while five of the shipping companies doing business here during the winter were willing to pay the union scale of wages, they declined absolutely to recognize the union, desiring to be free to hire whom they pleased.

It is understood, that from the association standpoint, the accepting of their scale by the steamship people is a recognition of the union. As to the employment of non-union labor it is claimed by the men that there will be no non-union labor to employ, as every man doing 'longshore work this winter will belong to the 'Longshoremen's Association, making a larger membership than ever before. It is also said with a certainty that there will be but one ship laborers' organization this season, so that in this way about all causes for friction will have been removed.

The election of officers proved lively, especially the election of a business agent. There had been some half a dozen names mentioned as in the running for this position. All, however, with the exception of Charles Daly, who had been acting previously, and Joseph O'Neil, retired, and, after a close contest, the latter won by four votes.

The other officers elected were: President, John McAndrews (re-elected); first vice-president, James LeClair; second vice-president, Alex. Boyne; recording secretary, Charles Daley; executive committee—Edward Thomas, Asa Tower, Joseph Walsh, John Sullivan, John London, William Waters, Gus Langbein, Frank Napier, Theodore Fairweather, Peter LeClair, John Mills, M. J. Kelly, James Sharp, Charles Gosselin, John Stewart, Wm. Daley, Edward Ryerson, George Catherine, James Walsh, William Priest, Robert McClafferty, Thomas McCarthy, Thomas Daley, Edward Morton, Fred McGill, James McLeod, Samuel Barton, John Holland, Wm. Horton, Jr., and Thomas Snyder.
