THE CASE AGAINST CLOSE FALL PASTURING

Some of our Agricultural Experiment stations, says the Farmers' Advocate, might do a useful work by comparing in absolute terms the relative yield of hay from meadow that has been fall-pastured with other that has had a generous aftermath left to protect the roots during winter, and add a bit of much-needed fertility by its decay in spring. Year after year the spectacle is witnessed of scant pastures being eaten down to the crown by shivering animals, often dairy cows, whose owners seem to act on the assumption that every bite snatched is a morsel saved. It is false economy Our best farmers know it and avoid the practice. But many others do not think six months ahead, and their fields and stock show it. One of the surest ways to run down a farm is to stock it heavily, and then pasture it severely in late fall and early spring. It not only runs down the farm, but it results in unprofitable stock. If the real effect on subsequent crop production could be estimated, we believe it would be found that this late-fall and early-spring pasturage makes a more expensive daily ration, and is much more expensive in results secured than a full ration of hay and grain.

Especially on cows are the results bad. Sheep, and even steers, can stand the cold better. In fact, the sheep can stand it much too long for the good of the grass; but the delicate maternal organism of the milch cow demands protection from weather inclemencies to do its best. Through October the cows should be stabled at night, and given a feed of silage or roots and hay, with a little meal added. It will pay handsomely for the following reasons: The cows will respond with a sustained or even increased flow of milk, partially paying for the feed and care by the immediate returns. Better milk flow, better prolonged, meaning a great deal more milk before the lactation period is finished.

The cows will become gradually accustomed to winter feed, and will not suffer that unfortunate constipation which results from sudden change off the grass. Better quality of manure, saved in good condition for application to the land which most needs it. More vigorous condition of the stock, due to better nourishment—consequence, thriftier calves and heavier milk flow next summer.

Boon to the meadows, which will return next summer an extra growth two or three times greater than the top left for winter mulch. No man has any right to expect increasing fertility or heavy crops who grazes his grass to the roots in fall. It is penny-wise and pound-foolish to the last degree.

At present values of butter and cheese, there should be no need to counsel generous feeding, to enable dairymen to take full advantage of the tempting prices ruling this fall. Everything points to the wisdom of crowding production now, even though it means slackening the feed later on in the winter, when dairy prices may ease off. As a matter of fact, cows which go into winter quarters in strong condition can do with less heavy feed along in the winter than those run-down animals that require expensive building up before they can do good work.

Mother and Daughter

MRS PATRICK CAMPBELL AND HER DAUGHTER STELLA
FROM THE SKETCH

Mrs. Patrick Campbell's daughter Stella, who will probably follow in her mother's footsteps, resembles Mrs. Pat not only in appearance but temperamentally. When dressed in the same costume as Greeba in "The Bondsman" the likeness is emphasized.

There was a large and representative gathering of the congregation of St. John's (Stone) church, last night, at the annual reunion, which was held in the school house. Addresses were delivered by the rector, who reviewed the year's work, and by Rev. Canon O'Meara, principal of Wycliffe College Toronto. There was a short musical programme, after which refreshments were served.

Colton Maynard, an instructor in English at the Cheshire Academy, Cheshire, Connecticut, has been in the habit for some time of asking the boys in his Shakespeare class to give appropriate titles for the scenes in different plays. The other day, after reading The Merchant of Venice, he asked one of the boys to suggest a good title for the scene where Jessica steals away from her father's house with Lorenzo. The boy showed his familiarity with melodrama, if not with Shakespeare, by answering quickly, "No mother to guide her."—Harper's Weekly.

The smallpox patient at the isolation hospital is reported to be improving.

MARINE NOTES

Schooner Elise arrived at Havre, France, last Monday with a load of lumber from Newcastle, N. B.

The little schooner J. Arthur Lord, before reported, which grounded in Nantucket Sound Tuesday, signalled for assistance when the storm became severe today, but as she was only a few miles off a windward shore her crew, when hailed by a boat which put off from Hyannis, stated that they wanted a tug and would not leave their vessel. She was still riding out the gale at dark tonight.

Tug Maggie M., Capt. Gilchrist, left this afternoon for Southwest Harbor (Me.), to tow the schooner W. H. Waters to St. John. The Waters was in collision with another schooner and lost her mainmast. The other vessel had her bowsprit carried away, besides receiving some other damage. The Waters is bound from Stamford to St. John.

Yesterday's Boston Post says:—The British steel bark Belmont, of Yarmouth, N. S., which has made numerous quick passages to this port from South America, has just ended the longest voyage in her entire career for the distance covered. She came into port yesterday afternoon in tow of the bay tug Orion, which hooked onto the clipper from an anchorage off Nobska, where she arrived Sunday from Rio Janeiro after a passage of 70 days. Her commander, Captain Ladd, stated that the voyage was one of the most trying in his many years' experience. Northeasterly winds were encountered from the very outset. Captain Ladd wishes to express his heartfelt thanks through the columns of the Post to Captain Wier of the British steamship Clara MacIntyre, which arrived at Philadelphia from Cheribon, Java, recently, for his kindness in steaming off his course and running down close to the Belmont, while in the latitude of Delaware, and taking the trouble to displa ysignals notifying him of a submerged wreck which was directly in his track and a very dangerous menace to navigation.

MORAN KEEPING HARD AT WORK

BOSTON, Oct. 31—District Attorney John B. Moran, candidate for governor on the Democratic, Prohibition and Independence League tickets, addressed rallies this evening in Everett, Waltham, Somerville and Malden. He was received in each of his appearances with cheers and all the meeting places were crowded.

In Everett, where he spoke in Everett Hall, the attendance was the largest known at a Democratic rally in the city. Ex-Congressman George Fred Williams and E. Gerry Brown, Democratic candidate for Lieut-Governor, also spoke here. Mr. Moran devoted much attention to his challenge to Governor Guild for a platform debate. He also discussed the various planks in Democratic platform, as he has done in previous speeches. "The gambling fraternity and the corporations," he said, "are all with Guild, who pretends to have dignity, but stoops in this campaign to a level lower than Boston's lowest ward politician."

Referring to his charges against Mr. Fairbank, of the Lewis & Clark exposition commission, Mr. Moran declared that Governor Guild was protecting Fairbank from public condemnation. Mr. Moransaid there should be a new state auditor who should go over the books of the state for ten years back and ascertain how many forged orders had been cashed, how many thousands of dollars stolen, as there was "no knowing how many cases similar to that of Fairbank existed."

In Waltham Mr. Moran again discussed the planks in the Democratic platform and also his charge regarding Mr. Fairbank of the Lewis & Clark exposition commission. "I say Governor Guild," he remarked, "you should remove this man from the Jamestown exposition commission. I say upon the testimony of the girl stenographer and of Mr. Perkins, the secretary of the Lewis & Clark exposition commission, he is a forger. I ask you Governor Guild, how long are you going to keep a criminal on the commission to represent this state in Virginia?"

It's as difficult to find out a friend as it is to lose an enemy.

W. FRANK HATHAWAY MAKES OBJECTION

Says City Should Not Allow Street Cars to Run Across Queen Square, W. E., or On Smythe Street.

Shall it have a track across Queen Square, Carleton?

Shall it have a track along Smythe street?

To the Editor of The Evening Times:

Sir,—I would respectfully point out to the common council a few reasons why the above privileges should not be granted to the street railway.

This company wishes to have the right to lay its tracks along Smythe street for the purpose of hauling coal from the Dominion coal pockets, and ashes from the works to the I. C. R. station. The company is willing to agree to use the tracks only at night.

As against granting this privilege I urge:

1st. That within two or three years after getting the right by night, the company will demand the right by day.

2nd. That in the winter Dock street to the I. C. R. is not used by heavy teams. Drivers explain that snow is thrown to the right and left, causing a sliding toward the tracks, therefore they avoid Dock street and use Smythe street. If the company be allowed to lay this track it will cause more inconvenience there to teams than it does on Dock street, as Smythe street is narrower than Dock, and in winter more snow settles in Smythe street.

3rd. I cannot see why the only two streets by which heavy traffic from the I. C. R. to the main business portion of the city is carried on, should be rendered inconvenient to business men and to teamsters. The concession asked for will save to the company large sums in cartage, but will increase to the merchants the cost of cartage.

In 1899 the Street Railway Company contributed less than $8,000 to the revenue of the city. In 1898 Toronto, with only four times our population received $109,000 as its share of the street railway receipts. In 1905 St. John received $9,500 from its street railway. In the same year Toronto received about $200,000.

The franchise to the street railway, which does not expire until 1934, only gives them the right to use our streets for passenger traffic. Why then should the council even consider giving them the right to use Smythe street for freight traffic, when it will interfere with general trade by delaying traffic between the wharves and the railway, especially during the winter?

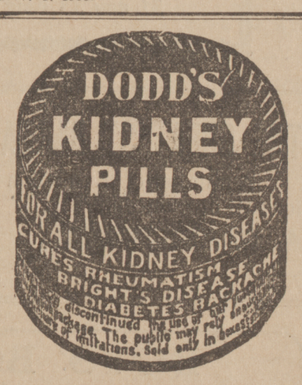

The company also asks to have the right to cross Queen Square in Carleton. This should not be granted on the general ground that no street railway should cross through our public squares. These places are for the citizens, and particularly for the young people. Today many may think that Queen Square in Carleton is not much used, but within ten years the citizens of Carleton, will regret the hour and the day when they allowed the street railway to put the tracks across the square. If it be considered so necessary to have a track through the square, to avoid the steep hill to the south-east, why not give the company the right to put their tracks down, with the written understanding that on a year's notice they would have to take up the rails and place the square in the condition it was before.

Finally let me say, Sir, that we have but very little for which to thank the Street Railway Company. They give us a low passenger rate from city points to the Seaside Park. On the other hand, they are charging us $1.75 per thousand feet for a poor quality of gas, which price is from 50 to 100 per cent. more than many other cities are paying. They also charge 5 cents higher per thousand watts of electric light, than it should be. The meter charge on both electric lighting and gas lighting is obnoxious. They have not yet decided to give workingmen reduced fares during working hours, as is done in many cities. Why then should the council consider for a moment their application to crowd Smythe street with their tracks for the purpose of hauling ashes and coal?

St. John seems to be looking backward, rather than forward in this question of lighting and street railways. The city concluded last year a ten-year contract for street lamps at $10 per lamp higher than that paid by most cities of a similar size in Canada. The council has given this company the franchise of the streets in Carleton, and I am told that this franchise is to last until 1934. I cannot understand why civic bodies, in the light of events both in Europe and America, would tie down the streets of Carleton to any company for a period longer than ten years. I am very truly yours,

W. FRANK HATHEWAY.
