

HIS SISTERS' QUEST

BY ANNA McDERMOTT.

"Now, I say, Albert Fairfax, what's the use of acting this way? You're spoiling the whole party." And in an agitated manner Robert Evans continued: "They are waiting for you," and as Albert did not move, Robert said: "Hang it, man, you are exasperating."

"I tell you," said Albert, "you may return to the dancing just as quickly as it may please you, I am here, and here I remain. If I appear offensive, I can only say I am sorry, but into that room I absolutely refuse to set a foot. It is all right to see a chap turned down hard, but to be the victim yourself, well, it—"

"Albert, there is just one thing about it, and—"

"Look here, Rob, what the deuce is in your tonight? I never heard you talk so before."

They were in the smoking room of Robert Evans' house, while dancing was in progress in the lower rooms, and the cause of the seeming unpleasant feeling was due to Helen Carlisle's having had no dance due to Albert. The room was lighted by a dim glimmer from the candles, and the dying embers in the hearth were making their last struggle for existence, and placed before it on a large warm rug were two chairs, not very far apart, yet not very close.

"She is the most delightful woman in existence," Robert was saying. "Such rare good breeding, such refinement, such dignity. She never seems bored, and yet know there must be some address which are anything but interesting to her."

Then came to them the strains of music, delicate and sweet, music such that seemed to tender the struggles warring among themselves within Albert, soothing and to make their renewed birth so intense, so utterly unbearable that the very air seemed distastefully oppressive.

"Are you really not going to dance?" asked Robert.

"No! No, not tonight." And thrusting his hands in his pockets, Albert went out on the balcony, walked a step and threw himself carelessly against the side of the door, as carelessly lighted a cigarette, looked into the sky, marvelled at its beauty, while his thoughts wandered with a seeming indefinite purpose, despite his efforts to dissuade them. He thought of Helen as he saw her first, two weeks ago, when she had come to visit his sister. "Wonderful she was in that travelling gown, but how much more so when she appeared at dinner," he thought aloud.

"She seemed a creation made for a moment's happiness, only to become invisible the next, but when she still she was quite real." How much had happened in those two weeks. A new world opened, new realities, new knowledge. And hardly knowing how, he found himself down stairs in the hall again leaning against the door. There she was. She was dancing with Edward Cole. "Such an exquisitely beautiful face," he thought, "such eyes, such lips." The awakening from this reverie was a slap on the shoulder.

"Say, Albert, you look ill; what is it?"

"Oh, nothing," he replied. And turning away he said: "I am going home now, good night."

Albert hurried to his home, entered the dining room which had seemed so bright at 8 o'clock the same evening, and which now seemed to offer no resource for his amusement. The room looked desolate. It seemed unadorned, it lacked an undefinable something. He seated himself before the fire; the night was chilly, but his restlessness became more evident. He changed his seat; that too failed to secure the desired effect. He rose from his seat, looked out of the window, was fascinated for a moment by the passing cabs, then restlessly paced the room, again resumed his seat, and leaning forward placed his elbows on his knees, his chin propped by the palms of his hands.

"Helen came here two weeks ago," he mused; "a year it seems, and then again a day. She holds me captive with her smiles, makes me miserable with the slightest frown, and tonight when she has made me suffer beyond all possible bounds, she loves me most. Ah, me!" sighing and moving restlessly, "love—queer material, makes one wonderfully forgetful of every surrounding, makes poor devils slaves—"

"Albert!" Helen had come noiselessly in and had covered his hand with hers. The only light was the faint glimmering from the logs, the only feeling, rapture. There were only two people in the whole world then, just two, "Albert, it is really late. Your sister has gone up stairs, but I did want to say good night to you."

"Is that all, Helen?" he ventured to ask.

"Is there anything else I can say?"

"Can't you say you are sorry?" I could forgive you anything if you would only say that. You have hurt me tonight. You know that I expected to dance with you that night; you knew that, yet, regardless of my foolish display of eagerness you told me you had no dance left. Another time I might not have cared, but you must know. Surely this morning when you came to breakfast, the verification of all things sweet, dear and lovely, surely then, even though my lips may have failed me, you must have seen, must have known how and what I felt; and then, when you went out with Robert Evans for your morning ride, and I met you at the door, took your hand, kissed it, and looked into your eyes, did you not say that everything within me was for you?"

She smiled sweetly, and impulsively he crushed her gently in his arms. It was no surprise when, two weeks later, the engagement was announced.

"I was troubled with head-ache for a number of years, but could get nothing to help me. I procured a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and finding it was doing me so much good, I got two more. I am now fully cured and think there is nothing in the world like Burdock Blood Bitters for head-ache."

MORE THAN $380,000 PAID ON WATER EXTENSION TO DATE

The expenditure on the water extension from its inception to the present time has amounted to $384,415.89, to meet which 4 per cent debentures to the amount of $378,500 are deposited as collateral with the Bank of New Brunswick. The question of a further issue was brought to the attention of the water and sewerage board last evening and the matter will be considered by the treasury board tonight.

In connection with the construction contracts the cost of the work already completed exceeds the original estimate by $22,272.37. The extension into Lake Latimer from section 3 is being pushed forward by B. Mooney & Sons and it is expected that it will be completed next month.

The connection with section 2 on the other side of the lake has not yet been made by McArthur and MacVay but work will, it is understood, be resumed as soon as the weather will permit. It is estimated that Loch Lomond water will be available for the use of the citizens in July. The memorandum of expenditure on the extension is:

HOME FOR INCURABLES GETS $1,000

The St. John Globe last evening said: "The Home for Incurables is today richer by $1,000 than it was on Tuesday, and the money comes to it as a result of the recent strike of the local ship laborers. It will be remembered that when the strike was settled the Telegraph and Times paid Messrs. Allan and Gear, representatives of the Allan and Donaldson lines, the sum of $1,000, or $500 from each paper, on condition that they would take away the men brought here to work in place of St. John laborers."

The payment was made on the order of Mr. David Russell, owner of the two papers.

Mr. John Russell has now sent to the treasurer of the Home for Incurables the sum of $1,000. With the return of the original cheques Mr. Russell received two letters, signed by Hugh Allan and Robert Reford. One is addressed to the Telegraph and the other to the Times, but they are identical in terms, and state that when the money was paid it was agreed between the receivers, but of course without Mr. Russell's knowledge, that the money should eventually be returned, and they now consider the time has come to do so. The two papers have turned it over to the Home, and the treasurer acknowledges it, with thanks.

The following letters and receipts tell the story as outlined above:

During the strike, and we, on our part, undertook to have the men returned to Montreal immediately. It was agreed by us at that time (of course without your knowledge) that we should eventually return you this five hundred dollars ($500.00).

We consider that the time has come for us to return your cheque, and we have much pleasure in enclosing herewith.

Yours truly,

Montreal, 12th March, 1906.

John Russell, Jr., Esq., Manager St. John (N. B.) Times, St. John (N. B.)

Dear Sir—On the 29th of November last you paid us five hundred dollars ($500.00) towards the expense of indemnifying the longshoremen brought by us to St. John (N. B.) during the strike, and we on our part undertook to return you this five hundred dollars ($500.00) immediately. It was agreed by us at that time (of course without your knowledge) that we should eventually return you this five hundred dollars ($500.00).

We now consider that the time has come for us to return your cheque, and we have much pleasure in enclosing it herewith.

A MILLION NEEDLES

COULD NOT INFLICT THE TORTURE WOMEN SUFFER FROM HEADACHES

Headache is not in itself a disease, but a symptom or accompaniment of other diseases, principally those of the stomach, liver and bowels, such as Constipation, Dyspepsia, Liver Trouble, Bad Blood, Female Complaints, General Debility and Weakness. Headache is common to both sexes, but more frequently affects females.

The varieties of headache most common are sick or bilious headache, nervous headache, headache from constipation, debility or indigestion, periodical and spasmodic headache. Undoubtedly the cause must be removed before permanent relief can be had.

removes the cause of the headache, and not only does this but it also restores the entire system to healthy action and buoyant vigor.

"I was troubled with head-ache for a number of years, but could get nothing to help me. I procured a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and finding it was doing me so much good, I got two more. I am now fully cured and think there is nothing in the world like Burdock Blood Bitters for head-ache."

Bill Up in Parliament to Bring Companies Under Railway Commission

Ottawa, March 28—(Special)—Hon. H. R. Emmerson introduced his bill in the house today to amend the railway act. In the first place it provides for an appeal from the railway commission to the supreme court on the question of jurisdiction but not unless it is first allowed by a judge of the supreme court. Then there is the appeal on questions of law.

Clause three provides for the taking of evidence. At present witnesses have to be brought to Ottawa at considerable expense to give testimony. Provision is made for the board accepting affidavits.

Clause three makes provision for railway directors declaring dividends. This is done at present but it is not legal without the consent of the shareholders.

Another clause makes it necessary for companies applying for the location of their lines to submit more details as to the route. The present practice is that a red line drawn across a map is about sufficient.

Authority is also given the railway commission to deal with water powers in respect to their development, etc.

Then the bill deals with the uniformity of rolling stock, and the rules in regard to the running and operation of trains and the use of coal instead of wood.

Provision is also made that when accidents occur, and anyone is personally injured, a report must be made at once to the board. More complete statistical information as to railways must be supplied the railway department in future.

To Control Telephone Lines and Rates.

The most important feature of the bill, as was fully explained by Mr. Emmerson, and also by Mr. Fitzpatrick, was that in respect to telephone. The government in the bill gives as complete and effective control to the railway commission over telephones and telephone rates as it now has over railway passenger and freight rates. The commission can now deal with the change of traffic between two railway companies.

In the present bill the commission can arrange for direct oral communication between two telephone companies. In doing so the question of exclusive contracts do not require to be considered and consequently the question of compensation for such will not arise.

Provision is made for the exchange of messages subject to the conditions to be imposed by the railway commission. But when one telephone company obtains connection with another, so that oral communications can be sent over both systems, there will be a condition that the company seeking connection must have its equipment up to a certain standard, so that business can effectively be done over both systems. The company seeking connection must not be a nuisance to the other.

The bill gives as effective and complete control over telephones as it is possible to do. At any rate that is the intention of the government and some further amendments will be made to the telephone clauses to make this certain.

W. F. MacLean, talked government ownership and Mr. Bain wanted to see the railway commission get control of the lines of the I. C. R.

R. L. Borden wanted to see government control as effective as possible, seeing the government did not embark on government ownership.

It was thought that Sir William Mulock was traveling in the direction of government ownership and it was not known how much this question may have had to do with his retirement. The telephone company was a monopoly and as I used to be subject to attacks and although I used most everything nothing relieved quickly until I discovered 'Nerviline.' I have used it also for pleurisy and sore chest and found it was just the proper thing. I cheerfully recommend 'Nerviline.'"
