MONEY MAXIMS

Some maxims of Russell Sage, which are said to have contributed to his success as a money getter, are now given to the world. They will enable no one to amass a hundred millions, but doubtless there is much practical wisdom in them, and some insight into the character of the man who coined some of them and adopted the others. Here are the maxims:

Any man can earn a dollar, but it takes a wise man to use it. This has been my motto from the very start of my business career.

I saved the first dollar I ever earned, and from that hour I have never been in debt to a human being for a cent that was not ready when due.

Society is to blame for many wasted lives.

To excite envy is to make enemies. Those who live for pleasure alone do no good to themselves or to others.

There is no such thing as the money cure; a good man cannot have too much money.

Fifty cents is enough for a straw hat; it will last two seasons.

If I had my life to live over again I would try just as hard to turn my money over and over and over again, that it might do the most good to other men.

I get plenty of relaxation from an exciting rubber of whist, played at night in my own home after dinner. When the game is over my day is done.

It is a surprising fact that many men endure unwarranted expenditures for no other reason than to excite the envy of their neighbors. How wicked is this!

A boy who knows bargains in socks will become a man who knows bargains in stocks.

When you have made your fortune it is time enough to think about spending it.

The tender care of a good wife is the finest thing in the world.

The longer a man lives the more mistakes he may be counted on to make.

Clubs are only a place for idle men and wasteful young men.

An active man builds success upon the foundation of failure; a passive man does not.

Real charity is disbursed without the blare of trumpets.

I think the vacation habit is the outgrowth of abnormal or distorted business methods. I fail to see anything legitimate in it.

The physician may recommend a change of air for a man when he is ill; but why be ill? Illness is nothing but an irreparable loss of time.

Securities have been made in great quantities and sold at high prices on the idea that economies to be effected by centralization of control will give them the arbitrary values which have been placed upon them. This theory will be exploded sooner or later, for there will always be competition. When the crash comes it will be a national disaster.

I fear the centralization of big industries in the hands of five or six men will prove a big mistake. When half a dozen men control the business and financial policy of a great industry a single error of judgment will plunge the whole nation into financial loss and ruin.

I do not say that trusts are not a good thing; but I do say we should go slow.

A wealthy man does not work for himself alone.

My one desire has been to be let alone in order that I might do what I desired in my own way. In that I have not succeeded.

Some people may not believe it, but it is a fact that it has been my keenest pleasure to see people succeed who have acted upon my advice.

A LOSING VENTURE

Considering Germany's standing as a military power and the Kaiser's reputation as a man looking about for a chance to make profitable and glorious war, the German venture in Southwest Africa is a surprisingly unfortunate one. It is believed to have cost about $150,000,000 in the last few years and the Germans are as full of fight as they were seven years ago. The New York Post compares the German campaign with the American occupation of the frequently pacified but still unconquered Philippines. It says:

"Official statistics of the German losses during the two and a half years' campaign in Southwest Africa are now available. Altogether 2,342 persons have perished from disease or bullets. The army proper has lost 2,120 men killed and wounded.

One thousand soldiers have returned to Germany as invalids, and a similar number is still in the field hospitals. As the troops number not much over 15,000, this means that for every fifteen soldiers, one is disabled by disease. Sixty-three officers and civilian officials, 102 non-commissioned officers, and 462 privates have fallen in battle. Of the 798 wounded only 40 succumbed to their injuries, which is thought to reflect great credit on the medical officers. The deaths by disease, 603, prove, however, that Japanese standards are by no means attained. Meanwhile, the losses steadily continue, although the collapse of the rebellion has been announced as often as our conquest of Samar. All Germany is thoroughly sick of the war, the scandals of which are proportionately greater than ours after the war with Spain. Even the army at home is disgusted, and as many time-expired men are left at the front because of the lack of proper transportation, the popular grumbling increases daily, particularly when the taxpayers study the length of the bill they have got to foot."

A REWARD OF $500

(The Telegraph.)

The Westmorland County Council will be generally commended for its announced decision to offer a reward of $500 for information positively clearing up the mystery of the lost Creamer children. Soon after the little ones disappeared this newspaper gave much publicity to all the known circumstances of the case, and succeeded in interesting Solicitor General Jones in the matter, with the result that the sheriff of Westmorland was instructed to investigate the case. The sheriff did so, but he lacked authority to make the expenditure necessary to cause the whole tract of country over which the children might have wandered to be searched thoroughly and systematically.

Many are no doubt satisfied that the search was as thorough as was possible. Even if that be admitted the mystery cries no less loudly for solution. A matter for regret is that this reward was not offered earlier; but now is much better than never. The fact that continued vigilance in the vicinity of the Creamer home has led to no discovery during many weeks of summer when it would appear impossible for human remains to escape detection necessarily revives several theories which attracted attention early in the case. That there is scant evidence to support any one of these theories is true; but such facts as are known tend to show that some line of inquiry must have been neglected. The County of Westmorland does well to make a final bid for a definite answer to the baffling and persistent question: What became of the Creamer children?

The Montreal Gazette recalls the fact that Louis XVI. dismissed his parliament, as the Car has done:

"It did not please the king or his advisers. The king ordered it to be closed. The Tiers Etat, being the representative section of the body, met in a tennis court where the members declared they would not dissolve until they had digested a constitution for France. The Revolution, the Terror, and the Republic were the result. On whether the elected members of the Duma will have the courage and the strength to do what the Tiers Etat did will depend the outcome of the present situation in Russia, and much else. If the czar could be trusted it would be well that the members of the Duma should accept the situation. The work of developing a constitution can best be done in time of peace, and this is hardly a time of peace. If the representatives feel that they cannot trust the czar, no one can say what the next days and months will bring forth."

Mr. Copp, M. P. for Digby, appears to think that this port will not be nationalized until after the Grand Trunk Pacific has been completed. But if the port is to be equipped by the government to handle a greatly increased traffic from the west the work of equipment should be finished by the time the railroad is ready to deliver freight. Otherwise the bulk of the freight will not come east of Quebec.

"There is," quoth Mr. Hearst, with an eye upon his own troubles, "a profound lesson in the hideous Russian situation—namely, that the Russian situation as modern mankind has never witnessed—for all Americans, but for none so much as the allied predatory millionaires and the political bosses who think it safe as well as profitable to steal elections."

Still, Stoessel can't complain, says the Boston Transcript. A similar fate apparently awaits the rest of the Russian generals. The people are thinning them out with remarkable impartiality.

THE AGE OF CLAMOR

Most reforms have had to be clamored for. They could not have been obtained otherwise in reasonable time. If they had been asked for mildly and conservatively the persons whose purses would be touched would have maintained a discreet silence and the general public would not have been stirred to action. It is true that cranks, visionaries, pseudo reformers, and mischief makers are clamoring for unwise or vicious legislation as loudly as genuine reformers are asking for needed legislation. They attack imaginary evils as greedily as the others do real evils. But the false reformers are no more noisy in this age than they have been in preceding ages. Society cannot get along without clamor. It is the great agent for the removal of abuses. Those who complain the most of its strident, discordant voice are the ones who are directly or indirectly interested in the continuance of the bad conditions against which clamor is raised. Deep seated evils cannot be cured by whispering against them.—Chicago Tribune.

REMARKS FROM THE PUP

She's taught me that I mustn't bark at little noises after dark. But just refrain from any fuss until I'm sure they're dangerous. This would be easier, I've felt. If noises could be seen or smelt.

She's very wise, I have no doubt. And plans ahead what she's about. Yet, after eating, every day, she throws her nicest bones away. If she were really less obtuse, she'd bury them for future use.

But that which makes me doubt the noise. Those higher powers that humans boast is not so much a fault like that. Nor yet her fondness for the cat. But on our pleasant country strolls her dull indifference to holes!

Oh, if I once had time to spend To reach a hole's extremest end, I'd grab it fast, without a doubt, And promptly pull it inside out. Then drag it home with all my power To chew on it in a leisure hour.

Of all the mistresses there are, Mine is the loveliest by far. Fain would I was myself apart If I could thus reveal my heart. But on some things I must conclude, Mine is a sane and virtuous creature.—Burgess Johnson, in Harper's Magazine.

IN LIGHTER VEIN

"The man rich enough to own a motor-car has his ups and downs," said the chauffeur.

"Ups and downs?" repeated his friend. "Yes, running up hills and running down people."

"What's the matter with the horse?" asked a dealer of a dissatisfied customer. "Does he run away?"

"Run away!" was the reply. "Run away! Why, he won't even walk away!"

"I hear your engagement with Miss Boodle is off. How did it happen?"

"In strict confidence, my friend, she got angry because I stole a kiss."

"I don't see why that should provoke her—when you were engaged."

"Well, you see, I stole this kiss from another girl."

"Oh, dear! how the hours do drag! I wish I knew how to hurry them on."

"Why don't you apply the spur of the moment?"

Mr. Knowit—"Red hair always accompanies great strength. It is natural."

Mr. Wunder—"Get out! Did you ever see a red-headed elephant?"

"At least, I can go down with colors flying," said the painter when his foot slipped on his ladder.

Watts—"When a man gets down there are few hands extended to him."

Potts—"Yes, few hands; but just think of the feet!"

The true editorial spirit," said the old-timer, "is declining."

"I think you're right," agreed the struggling author, "it certainly doesn't appear to be accepting."

She—"How's the motor-car getting on, Sir Charles?"

He—"Well, fact is, I've seen very little of it. You see, I've had it three months, and when it isn't in the hospital I am."

Daughter—"I cannot give Jack up, father. I shall die if I do!"

Father—"You must never see him again. I will buy you a new set of furs!"

Daughter—"Well, dear father, I suppose I must try and be brave. When will you take me to choose the furs?"

"I'm tired of life! In fact, I wish I were dead!" sighed the despondent man.

"Then why don't you see a doctor?" remarked the cheerful idiot.

First Surgeon—"And the operation was performed just in time."

Second Surgeon—"Yes; in another day the patient would have recovered without it."

An old gentleman, on taking his first sea trip in rather a leaky vessel, observed the men working the pumps.

"Dear me," he said, "I did not know you had a well on board, Captain; but I'm really very glad you have, for I detect sea water!"

NEW YORK, July 25—Four-year-old Elsie Taylor has been unconscious sixty-two days, on the top of the great office building at No. 60 Wall street, in the heart of the financial district.

Physicians and nurses who are caring for the little sufferer of spinal meningitis declare it is the strangest case to come under their observation and they refuse to predict what the end will be.

The child's father is the superintendent of the building and has one of the most remarkable homes in New York. It is 375 feet above the street and never a sound from the bustle and turmoil of the crowd below reaches the sick bed.

It was in the early part of May that the first signs of the disease appeared. It went through the usual stages and the child apparently was improving when she lapsed into unconsciousness, from which nothing has been able to rouse her.

Doctors Northrup and Tuttle of the Presbyterian Hospital staff have charge of the case, but beyond devising new forms of giving nourishment, there is little for them to do.

Monday, according to the Jewish calendar, was the first day of Ab, which among the orthodox Hebrews is followed by seven days of abstinence from meat and other manners of fasting. The time is more rigorously observed in Europe than in this country. A prominent Hebrew resident said last night that the occasion is not specially observed in St. John.
