ON THE FAITH OF THE FUTURE

(The Congregationalist.)

I am bound to believe in three things concerning our American Christianity. The great faith in the incarnation will be a profounder and a more intelligent faith. The ideal expression of the moral life of God in Jesus Christ will be a deeper insight for our successors and a more precious possession. The universal expression in man of the moral order in the being of God will be held with a stronger grasp and a dearer regard. In the moral constitution of the race, and in the Supreme Leader of the race, men will more and more look for the expression of the moral being of God. God is light, absolute and infinite. Christ is the light of the world, the apostle from the Father of lights. His true disciples are the light of the world. This faith in God, in Christ and in the true disciples of Christ is bound to prevail.

The second assurance for the future concerns the spirit. The first expectation may be said to concern the philosophy of man's moral and religious being; the second expectation concerns the life of the religious soul. Beyond the perpetual necessity of the divine spirit in the beginning and continuance of the higher life in man, there are today, for thoughtful people, new necessities. More and more we crave the things that are certain. More and more we refuse to rest in the uncertain. And all things outside the verifying process of the religious soul are subject to uncertainty. The way in which Jesus came into this world, the miracles, the manner of the resurrection of our Lord are subject to debate. As time flies believers are farther away from that hallowed past. What actually took place then is the subject of belief, but in the supreme sense, not of certainty. Therefore, we seek the Holy Ghost, the comforter, the Lord and giver of life. We take refuge in him. We know him as the clearness and strength of life itself. He is with us in the depths and on the heights, Soul of our soul, Life of our life. We do not deny the other things; we take them as they may commend themselves to reason; but more and more we rest not in them but in the Holy Spirit. Here shall rest the greater and happier religious soul of the coming century. The peace of God is here, the certainty without the shadow of doubt, the confidence serene, unclouded, full of joy, the life that like the flight of a bird is far above the din and confusion of earth, beyond the reach of the necessary but sad strife of tongues.

The third expectation concerns the Bible. That book has gone through the great process of criticism. The worship of the Bible, the subjection of the conscience to it is, for the educated man, no longer possible. In the best sense of that uncertain and perilous adjective, the Bible has become a natural book. It has ceased to be the Lord of the conscience; it has taken its place as the supreme servant of the conscience. And here opens a new epoch of power for the Word of God in the Bible. The God who speaks to men today spoke to the fathers by the prophets and in His Son. The wonder of that speech and the wonder of the words in which it lives, must more and more win the veneration and love of the wise. Cleared of the impediments, of the superstitions and senseless claims regarding it, the Bible will go forth in its own strength as the mental utterance of the life of God in the life of a monumental race.

A MAINE HUMORIST

Who Alleges That Canadians are Simply Making Hay for Uncle Sam.

(Bangor News.)

Though many American farmers are seeking the Canadian northwest for the purpose of securing cheap and fertile farms, the movement is more speculative than permanent, and the men who have money enough to pay cash for untilled prairie lands today will be wise enough to sell their holdings whenever the price shall warrant a handsome profit. All this time the young French-Canadians from Montreal and the young men and women from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Islands are setting in steady tides toward New England. It is estimated that the French-Canadian population of Maine today is 40,000. In half a century or less this population will more than double from natural increase. The inhabitants along our northern border are becoming Canadianized through continuous immigration. They are good people, too, just such people as we want. The wisest men in Canada are aware of what is going on, and are not so narrow as to resist the inevitable.

The process of assimilation may seem to be slow, but that it is coming no one can doubt. Canada is destined to become a part of the United States of America. All public expenditure which Canada may make in any other direction, is just so much good money wasted.
