Isobel dragged her dazed forces together. With Basil cold and silent she might keep silence, too; but here in the warm shelter of his strong arm—

"He thinks he has," was all she could say.

"And you think he will — will go to your father?"

"I have no doubt he will."

"And—and what will happen?" gasping with anxiety and the choking gusts.

"I don't know," hopelessly.

Conyers paused, in spite of the need for haste. "For God's sake, Isobel, trust me. Is it something that happened while you were away? It can't be anything else," desperately, "something that you can't remember, but which that devil has got hold of, and is distorting for his own ends. He's playing on your fears, dear, making a mountain out of some molehill. If you can't tell me, then, whatever it is—tell your mother."

"My mother—oh, my God, no!" cried Isobel, sharply falling back against the supporting arm.

Conyers stood still wrestling with a wilder storm than the snow-laden gale, but his first concern was to place the half-fainting girl in safety. Thinking must wait till then. He braced his arm more tightly about her, and began the heavy, plodding tramp once more. God only knew how far they might be from the village, but the world was reduced to a yard's breadth of dizzying, dancing snowflakes. Isobel still mechanically kept her feet, but his own strength he knew was failing from the double strain—and if so—

A sudden confusion of voices and of barking seemed all at once to rise about them, and one or two dogs came bursting through the pallid, glistening veil of snow, followed by a posse of guides!

* * * * * *

An hour or two later Isobel, who had been left alone with many tender injunctions to rest and sleep, grown almost desperate with lying wide-eyed, living over the day's happenings again, stole down to her mother's room. The table was strewn with letters and papers. Sir David, standing by it, seemed to be intently reading an official-looking paper.

Suddenly he crushed it together, and, making one step to his wife's side, caught her in his arms.

"My wife, my dear wife—my own—my very own—my wife!" he gasped, as if overcome by some sudden, uncontrollable emotion.

Isobel was about to withdraw softly. For once her mother was wholly unconscious of her presence, and this aspect of her mother was wholly new to her. It was not the face which had now grown familiar to her, but the face of Marian Drummond, the woman whose patient, steadfast heart had been stronger than her pride, who had waited long for the love which came back to her at last.

"My own wife," Sir David kept repeating. "Marian, I have been a sorry husband to you. I have tried you sorely since—since—"

"David, my husband, my love," in a voice of infinite soothing tenderness and gentle patience, "I know you have been sorely troubled—sorely distressed—but trust me, dear; has my love—my trust—ever failed you?"

There was a sudden smart tap at the door, and in very German English a waiter's voice said—

"Mistaire Ashe requests most special to see Sir David Stormont."

As Sir David turned impatiently, his eyes met his daughter's standing in the shadow of the door. Whatever they read there, the sudden new light died out of his own like a lamp blown out by the wind.

"Tell him I will come," he said, in a dull, changed voice, thrusting the crumpled paper away.

CHAPTER XXVII.

A HOUSE OF CARDS.

"None the worse of your unpleasant experience, I hope?" inquired Sir David, rather perfunctorily, when Ashe was ushered into the room which he used for writing. There certainly did not seem much need for the inquiry, as Ashe, perfectly dressed as usual, showed no trace of the exhausting struggle through the snow.

"Fortunately, none of us needed to be 'rescued,'" said Ashe, with a smile; "although I am sure Conyers would be glad of their help in getting Miss Stormont safely home. It was terrible for her. I hope she hasn't suffered from the cold and the fatigue," earnestly.

"Thanks, I think not, though naturally she is a good deal exhausted," said Sir David, and then he paused definitely, a pause which said plainly enough, "What can you have to say to me which renders this interview necessary?"

And had Ashe not been so assured of the strength of his position, he might have found that a very embarrassing moment, and the embarrassment would not have been lessened by the fact that it took Sir David some time to comprehend what Ashe's business with him was, to realize that this young man whom he knew merely as an agreeable "detrimental," was with all due form requesting his daughter's hand.

"You think this great presumption, I fear," said Ashe, when he had finished, and Sir David sat gazing at him for a moment in silence, as if still wondering whether he had heard aright.

"I don't wish to use any harsh words, Mr. Ashe," he said at last, "but from anything I know of your position, it hardly entitles you, pardon me, to make such a request. You cannot but be aware that Miss Stormont will be my sole heiress."

It was Sir David Stormont, the grand seigneur, the great land owner, composedly conscious of his position and its dignities, who was speaking now.

"I do not know what encouragement you may think you have received to make this proposal," went on Sir David, in the tone of a man willing, in words at least, to spare another's feelings, but thinking it needful at the same time to show him the enormity of his proceedings; "I take it for granted, however, that you have come to me first."

"It would have been more correct, I admit," said Ashe calmly, "but the fact is I have spoken to Miss Stormont, and (smiling) she referred me to you."

"I hardly know how much you mean to imply by that, but, from what I know of my daughter's feelings, not its usual acceptation in such circumstances, I should think."

"The circumstances are hardly quite usual," put in Ashe. But Sir David went on:

CRu.prwkaa

"In any case, I must ask you now to take it from me as final that I have other views for Miss Stormont's future," rising as he spoke.

"For Miss Stormont! Yes, that I can quite understand, but you might have other views perhaps, for Miss Isobel—Brown!" in a tone of studied quiet.

Sir David started to his feet as a man does who, unwarned, receives a fatal stab.

"I know of no such person," he said, peremptorily, haughtily, but with a swift intake of the breath.

Ashe smiled. "I am not quite the bare-faced fortune-hunter you think me. I wouldn't have been guilty of such a fatuous proceeding unless, as you see, I had something to offer. 'Knowledge is power' sometimes, though not so often, perhaps, as the copybooks would have us believe. It will save time, however, if you will allow me to state what I happen to know, and then you can decide what it is worth, or," with a smile, "kick me out, if you please. I shall be as brief as I can."

"It will be better," said Sir David, sternly, as he resumed his seat. "I can understand, though, that you should wish to justify your conduct if you can."

HER HUSBAND WAS A DRUNKARD

A Lady who cures her husband of His Drinking Habits Writes of Her Struggle to Save her Home.

A PATHETIC LETTER.

"I had for a long time been thinking of trying the Tasteless Samaria Prescription treatment on my husband for his drinking habits, but I was afraid he would discover that I was giving him medicine, and the thought unnerved me. I hesitated for nearly a week, but one day when he came home very much intoxicated and his week's salary nearly all spent, I threw off all fear and determined to make an effort to save our home from the ruin I saw coming, at all hazards. I sent for your Tasteless Samaria Prescription, and put it in his coffee as directed next morning and watched and prayed for the result. At noon I gave him more and also at supper. He never suspected a thing, and I then boldly kept right on giving it regularly, as I had discovered something that had set every nerve in my body tingling with hope and happiness, and I could see a bright future spread out before me—a peaceful, happy home, a share in the good things of life, an attentive loving husband, comforts and everything else dear to a woman's heart; for my husband had told me that whiskey was vile stuff and he was taking a dislike to it. It was only too true, for before I had given him the full course he had stopped drinking altogether, but I kept giving him the medicine till it was gone, and then sent for another lot, to have on hand if he should relapse, as he had done from promises before. He never has and I am writing you this letter to tell you how thankful I am. I honestly believe it will cure the worst cases."

About 4 o'clock car 57 again roamed from the rails and ploughed the gravel for about forty yards. After considerable trouble the car was once more placed in commission.

A COVER COAT OF TAN COVERT.

Tan is a color which has always been, and doubtless always will be, fashionable for the separate coat, especially that which is at all dressy. Many of the new coats for street wear and dressy automobile wear this season, are made of tan cloth or covert and trimmed with the material in a novel arrangement of brands, braid, buttons and applications of velvet in collar and cuff insets, and also in the form of motifs in combination with braid. The illustrated model of tan broadcloth has a trimming of shaped bands around the shoulders in the form of a round yoke in the front and suggesting a hood in the back, the pointed ends of these straps trimmed with cloth covered buttons. The fronts are double breasted fastening to the left side with silk cord loops, and the collar which is a turnover is trimmed with brown velvet and white silk braid. Motifs of the brown velvet and braid trim the high stiff cuffs which finish the very full sleeves. The coat is lined throughout with brown and white striped satin.

WHAT A PITY

That ambitious people through hard work invariably neglect health. It is pitiful to look into their pale, tired faces and see plainly written there the evidence of transgressed law.

The penalties of over-work are as easily seen as they are hard to bear—sleepless nights—tired mind and body—hearts that flutter and cause all sorts of uncomfortable feelings.

Happily if these symptoms have not been so long established, as to be chronic, Ferrozone will cure them.

Its mode of action is very simple, its curative power very great. It makes people eat more because it creates a wholesome feeling of hunger.

If you want strength and endurance use Ferrozone—it will give it to you. No other tonic so full of nutriment and strength making properties.

Even one box will prove its enormous merits; try Ferrozone—50c. per box.

NO CONCILIATION BOARD IS WANTED

Cumberland Railway and Coal Co. Refuses Its Services in Springhill Strike.

Halifax, Sept. 9—There was hope among the miners and people of Springhill early today that the strike in the coal mines that has been on for nearly six weeks and keeps 1,500 men out of work, might be on the verge of settlement, but on the other hand the company say they will have nothing to do with new proceedings before any board of conciliation that may open.

The board of conciliation resumed today and on opening Judge Patterson, the chairman, explained that it had been intimated to him that the reassembling of the board would not be repugnant to the parties to dispute. He had therefore at once taken this course and now wished to say before proceeding with the order of business, if the board could be of any service to the parties in the matter which caused the strike they were here to do all that lay in their power to assist in arriving at some settlement. If no objection was raised the board would proceed with the business for which it was originally called. The company's solicitor then handed in the following statement:

"The Cumberland Railway & Coal Company is advised that the functions of your board have reference to disputes between an employer and his employes, (Section 5 and 57 of act). The other party to the present investigation has since the commencement of the last sitting of your board terminated that relation with the company. Under these circumstances it appears to the company that further proceedings before your honorable body would be wholly futile, if not unauthorized. The company, therefore, greatly regrets that it must respectfully decline, pending the present relations between parties, to take any further part in the proceedings. As the other party to the investigation has seen fit not to adopt the findings of a previous board, the company feels all the more strongly compelled to adopt the course above stated."

The board then adjourned until tomorrow morning, when it will be decided whether the investigation will proceed or not. Whatever the decision may be, the company will take no further part in the proceedings.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

SCHOOL BOARD MAKES CHANGES

Relieves Over Crowding by Moving One School From Albert Building to La Tour.

As a result of a brief report made by Dr. Bridges to the school board Monday touching on the overcrowded condition of some of the school buildings, it was decided to move one school from the Albert building, Carleton, to the La Tour. The vexed question of keeping the Sandy Point school open was again up for discussion, and Dr. Bridges was instructed to supply a teacher for it this session at all events. George E. Day, the new trustee recently appointed by the city council, in place of Robert Maxwell, retired, was introduced and appointed visitor to the Centennial and Winter street schools.

The correspondence was then taken up. John Akerley, janitor of the Albert school, sent a request that his salary be increased to $35 a month. This was referred to the buildings committee.

Mary M. Mitchell's application for a position on the reserve staff of St. Malachi's school was ordered entered on the application book.

W. J. Tait, janitor of the High school, asked for $10 for extra cleaning in connection with the painting of the building. This was ordered paid.

L. Maud Cavanaugh, of Victoria school, wrote asking for leave of absence for the remainder of the term, on account of her father's health. This was granted, without pay.

A. A. Wilson, for the board of trustees of the Leinster street church, wrote to say that they found it impossible, for the $225 allowed by the board, to continue to heat the rooms rented for school purposes. The matter was referred to the buildings committee.

A letter was received from Dr. Inch, calling the attention of the board to the recent enactment concerning flying flags on school buildings. Ald. Bullock moved that it be allowed to lie on the table till the estimates for next year be taken up.

Mr. Day thought it was the duty of the board to look into the matter a little more closely. He suggested that a small committee be appointed to secure information as to cost of poles, flags, etc., and report back. After some little discussion this was agreed to, and the chairman appointed Messrs. Nase, Coll and Day.

Mr. Russell recommended that Mr. Hill, the janitor of the manual training school, be allowed $5 for July and $10 for August. This is $5 extra, but Mr. Russell explained that Mr. Hill had been present the whole of August and had done a great deal of extra work checking goods. After some discussion this was left with the manual training committee.

Dr. Bridges next reported that he had appointed Miss Black to the Millidgeville school, an appointment which the board ratified. He also reported the organization of the manual training department.

Mrs. Skinner asked for and obtained leave to purchase small supplies for the domestic science training department.

FREDERICTON MAN TELLS OF HIS FALL

Thomas Sewell, Who Was Hurled 360 Feet in Quebec Bridge Disaster Talks of His Experience.

Fredericton, Sept. 9—Thomas Sewell, the young man who figured in the Quebec bridge disaster, arrived here today en route to his former home at Lincoln.

When the bridge structure collapsed Sewell was working on the traveler, 365 feet above the level of the river. He says he was at work applying a nut to a bolt when he felt himself flying through space.

He lost consciousness while in the air, but came to when he got into the water. He went down feet first, but he does not remember how far he sank below the surface. While he was coming up he was struck by a huge stick of timber, which gave him quite a boost. When he reached the surface he was picked up by some men in a boat and taken ashore.

He is still suffering somewhat from the effects of the accident, but expects to be all right in a short time. Sewell has not made any plans for the future, but thinks it possible he may again engage in bridge building work.

A mock breach of promise trial at the Opera House this evening, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, attracted a large audience, and proved very interesting. Miss Sadie Waycott was plaintiff, and T. B. Kidner defendant. Colonel W. Newton was counsel for plaintiff, and the defendant's cause was championed by J. Howe Dixon. After listening to conflicting testimony from a number of witnesses and able addresses from counsel and judge, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $3.48, the full amount of her claim.

Announcement of the engagement at Halifax of Miss Louie Wadmore, eldest daughter of Lieut.-Colonel Wadmore, R. C. R., and Norman Ritchie, a young lawyer of the garrison city, has created considerable interest in this city, where the bride is well known.

Invitations have been received by friends in this city from Dr. and Mrs. George R. Parkin for the wedding of their daughter, Miss Grace D. Avery, and Harry Egerton Wimperes, on Saturday, Sept. 28, at 2.15 o'clock, at the church of St. Thomas of Canterbury at Goring-on-Thames, England.

MARINE NEWS

Monday's New York Commercial says: The eight-masted schooner Thomas W. Lawson of the Coastwise Construction Company, said to be the largest schooner in the world, was libeled for $259,000 by the Sun Company yesterday in the United States district court. This is the extent to which the Sun Company declares it has been damaged because of the alleged failure of the owners of the schooner to carry out their contract.

The Thomas W. Lawson was chartered May 22, 1906, by the Sun Company for a period of five years, at $6,500 a month. She was to be used in carrying general merchandise, especially petroleum. Before being taken out she was refitted for this purpose, but on August 1, 1907, when the company ordered the vessel to proceed to Port Sabine (Tex.), the skipper refused to sail unless additional steel structures and an expensive chamber were provided on the ground that they were essential to the safety of the vessel. The Sun Company now claim that the failure of the vessel to sail as ordered, has injured them to the extent of $259,000.

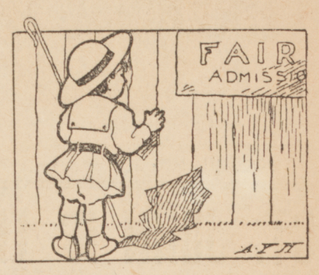

The schooner John Maxwell, which discharged a cargo of clay at the pottery, Portland (Me.), to Ship's Harbor (N. S.), is chartered to take a cargo of laths to Philadelphia.

In recognition of his skill in rescuing a fisherman from a dory during a severe storm, the Life Saving Benevolent Association, of New York, has awarded its gold medal to Captain Robert C. Warr, commander of the Cunard steamer Carmania.

The rescue was made early in the morning of June 10 last. The sea was exceedingly rough when the lookout sighted a dory with a man helpless from exposure, hunger and exhaustion clinging to it as it was thrown from wave to wave. The condition of the sea made it impossible to launch a boat, and Captain Warr set about the difficult task of manoeuvering his big steamer alongside the little craft. In this he was finally successful, and one of the Carmania's crew sprang into the dory and fixed a rope around the famished fisherman's body and the rescued and rescuer were drawn on board. The fisherman was Louis Vollet, a member of the crew of the French fishing schooner Mimosa.—N. Y. Commercial, Sept. 9.

At a meeting of the executive of the Canadian Club in the Times building yesterday afternoon matters relative to the catering for the luncheon on Monday, Sept. 23, at which General Booth will be the guest of honor were considered and a committee appointed to complete the arrangements. This is expected to be one of the most largely attended luncheons of the club, and will be held at 6.15 p. m., to give opportunity to hear the general at greater length than would be possible at a noon-day affair. Those present at yesterday's meeting were the president, W. E. Earle, Secretary Geo. A. Henderson, Rev. G. A. Kuhring, Dr. T. D. Walker, M. E. Agar, Ald. Baxter and A. M. Belding.

Bo-Peep's Disappointment.

Little Bo-Peep went to buy a sheep,
A sheep at the country fair;
But not a peep did he get of a sheep;
Though he hunted everywhere.

In the meadow wide the sheep did hide,
For they knew, so I've been told,
That should they stray to the fair that day
They straightway will all be sold.

So safe and sound on the grassy ground
The little white sheep did sleep.
And the country fair hadn't one anywhere
To be sold to little Bo-Peep.

AN EXPENSIVE ERROR

How a Proof Readers Mistake Cost Montreal $25,000.

Montreal, Sept. 9—By a curious clerical error Montreal will lose $25,000 in taxes collected from life insurance companies. Four years ago city charter amendments were secured which it was thought covered the point. There were several kinds of insurance to be reached but by a blunder of the proofreader when the final draft was presented to the assembly the important word "life" was omitted.

The city went ahead and collected the tax, but the insurance fraternity prompted by legal advice first paid under protest and in the end threatened suits. Some of the aldermen wanted to wait till the legislature could once more pronounce on the question but the city council today decided to refund the $25,000 which represents taxes for four years on thirty companies. A new by-law is being prepared to reimpose the tax for the future in accordance with new legislative powers but as to the past the city loses and pays $25,000 for the oversight of a clerk whose distraction was a costly affair.

The adjourned meeting of the Royal Conservative Club, announced for last evening, was attended by but three or four. As far as could be ascertained nothing definite was done.
