Sir Hilton's Sin.

She looked at the telegram again, read it, and then noted that the postmark was Tilborough; and she turned it over to examine the envelope, which she had dropped—she did not recall in her half-dazed state when or where.

But it was enough—the boy had given it to her, and it could be for no one else.

"Oh, Hilton, Hilton!" she groaned. "Has it come to this? A liaison with some low-born, base creature. Kept with my money. This is why you have always been so short; this is why you have always been degrading yourself by asking for more. All found out at last. Do pray tell her ladyship. She won't be very hard upon us! Indeed!" she said, half-aloud, and through her hardest teeth. "Of course not. Oh-h-h! I could have overlooked a relapse into his old gambling vice, but this—this baseness! The villain—the villain!"

"Who is it?" she muttered, reading again. "La Sylphide. Some French creature, dwelling in that nest of infamy, Tilborough. Why! Oh, great heavens! That wretched racing woman—that widow! She must have been here to see him, this morning when we parted. Oh, I see it all now. The telegram—dated yesterday—she did not join her according to her request, and she had the audacity to come here after him. That is it. All found out at last! What could be all found out at last? Oh—oh—oh!"

Lady Lisle covered her face with her hands, the colored paper crackling softly as it touched her temples, making her start as if it had stung her burning skin, and dash it down on the carpet and stamp upon it in disgust.

But it was a proof of her husband's infidelity, she thought, and she stooped and picked it up, wishing her fingers were the tongue, as she smoothed it out, doubled it, and held it ready for the interview about to take place.

"And so I am not to be very hard, I am to condone everything. Well, she added, with a bitter laugh which seemed to tear itself from her throbbing breast, "we shall see."

She paused again with her poor brain seeming to seethe with wildly jealous thoughts, every one garnished with cruel suspicions, and seeming to tell more and more against her. But all the time she was suffering from the belief that she was seeing more and more clearly as the cruel moments glided on.

"Yes, I see it all now," she cried, passionately—"poor, weak, deluded, loving fool that I have been! I have been a creature! Horrible creature! Yes, of course. A woman who is said to have refused of her after offer since her poor husband's death. La Sylphide—of course, as I had not heard that she bought a portion of Hilton's stud when his horses were sold, and one of the Sylphide, whose name she dares to assume in her clandestine communications to him. Oh, how kind to me Fate has been! To think of it! I might have been a trusting victim for years—hoodwinked—blinded to their infamy. Ah! he shall find out what the weak, loving, confiding woman who he has deceived can be."

There was a very peculiar smile upon Lady Lisle's handsome face as she crossed to the fireplace, to be met by Khan, the Persian cat, who descended from his ottoman, stretched himself, and made ready to give himself a comforting electric rub against his mistress's silk dress, but to his astonishment was not tickled, but thrust violently aside by a boot, to stand staring, while her ladyship continued her march.

She did not rush but went to the bell deliberately.

"Yes, I will be firm and calm," she said, half-aloud, and the smile grew more strained and peculiar. It was such a look as Medea of old might have worn when a certain trouble of classic fame had arisen with a gentleman named Jason; but she dragged at the bell-handle in a way which brought Jane in a hurry to the room.

"I will not seek him in his study," muttered the poor woman, tragically. "I will have him fetched to me here."

"Your ladyship rang?" said Jane, looking at her mistress wonderingly.

"Yes, go and—no, stop. Where is Master Sydney?"

"I think he has gone fishing, my lady. I saw him with his rod and basket. Oh,

Constipation

Baked sweet apples, with some people, bring prompt relief for Constipation. With others, coarse all-wheat bread will have the same effect. Nature undoubtedly has a vegetable remedy to relieve every ailment known to man. If physicians can but find Nature's way to health, this is strikingly true with regard to Constipation.

The bark of a certain tree in California—Cascara Sagrada—offers a most excellent aid to this end. But, combined with Egyptian Senna, Slippery Elm Bark, Solid Extract of Dr. J. C. Dr. Shop Laboratories, from this ingenious and most effective prescription. Its effect on Constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath, Bloating, etc., is indeed prompt and satisfying.

BABY PRINCESS LINGERIE ELABORATED WITH LACE AND EMBROIDERY.

So elaborate are the lingerie frocks of this summertime with lace and embroidery, that very often no lingerie material such as fine lawn or batiste, is employed in their make-up. Wide embroidery flourishes with a very deep portion of the plain material above the embroidery are used very generally, and in this way the necessity of the plain material by the yard is very often done away with. In the skirt pictured the entire upper part is made of flouncing inset with two rows of narrow Valenciennes lace, and to the scalloped edge of this flounce is set the lower part of the skirt much inset and tucked, the material being of fine batiste. The waist, joined to the skirt in baby princess fashion with a band of embroidery, is an elaborate creation of lace edging and insertion and embroidery bandings, the bandings taking the form of suspenders, joined front and back with a cross piece of the embroidery. The sleeves are made in entirely a new style on a foundation of batiste matching, the body of the blouse, and are gathered into a lace frilled band of the embroidery. A delicately tinted silk slip of orkeda made in princess fashion and boned to the figure is worn beneath this gown, set off by a bell shaped hat of white chip with underbrim facing of black satin, and trimmings of black velvet ribbon and one ostrich droop over the brim to the shoulder in the back.

"Yes, my lady; for I reached out and there was the bicycle leaning up against the creepers and the roses, and I could hear voices, and someone sobbing, and—"

Jane's mouth shut with a snap.

"Why do you stop?" said Lady Lisle, excitedly.

"I don't—don't like to tell you any more, my lady. I don't—I don't—indeed."

"Jane!"

"Pray don't make me tell, my lady," sobbed the girl; "it will hurt you so."

"I must hear it, Jane," said the poor woman, hoarsely. "I must know the truth."

Jane gave a gulp, as if she was swallowing something, and her voice changed almost to a whisper, as she went on: "I could hear whispering, my lady, and—and—Oh! don't make me tell, my lady."

"I must know, Jane," cried the quivering questioner, in a tone which completely mastered all further hesitation. "There was kissing, my lady, quite plain, and she—"

"She!"

"Yes, my lady—began sobbing and crying, and him whispering to her not to make such a noise or she'd be heard and calling her dear and darling, I think, but it was all so low."

Lady Lisle groaned.

"And it went on ever so long, my lady," continued Jane, whose hesitation was turned now in her excitement to volubility; "and then, as I stood there at the window listening, she jumped out, and I drew my head back, but I peeped out once more and she—"

"She!" gasped Lady Lisle again.

"Oh, yes, my lady, it was a she, of course, for I just caught sight of her face as she turned to hold the gate back when she went through on her bicycle. It was a girl, in national costume"—Jane meant national—and she was very little and very pretty, and one side of her hair had come half down."

SWAPPED GOOD MONEY FOR BAD

New York Bunco Men Secure Hard Earned Savings of Poor Fruit Dealer.

NEW YORK, July 11.—By dint of hard work and self-denial Vincenzo Pandio, a fruit dealer of No. 830 Flushing avenue, Williamsburg, succeeded in saving $180. He lost it all in about two minutes. A couple of sharpers got hold of him, slipped him $7,000 in stage money and took in exchange his $180 of genuine stuff.

Pandio appealed to the police of the Clymer street station and they arrested Joseph Alexander, twenty-five years old, of No. 106 Ross street, who described himself as a chemist, and Vincent Vena, thirty-four years old, of No. 437 East Twelfth street, Manhattan. Alexander was held on a charge of larceny and Vena on a technical charge of vagrancy. They denied having taken Pandio's savings.

The money was lost by an exchange of wallets. In the wallet given to Pandio was a receipt for a registered letter, made out to Alexander. That led to his arrest.

Three candidates were initiated by Gold on Rule Lodge, I. O. O. F., Carlton, last week. After the ceremony refreshments and gramophone selections were enjoyed. The lodge is reported flourishing.

EVIDENCE COMPLETE IN B. F. SMITH CASE

Woodstock, July 11.—The evidence was finished this afternoon in the case of B. F. Smith, charged with buying stolen lumber, and counsel will address the jury tomorrow morning.

This morning John Farley, William Giberson, Perry Crain and Deputy Sheriff Foster gave evidence. The evidence of Lewis H. Bliss, as taken at the preliminary examination, was admitted and read by arrangement.

The crown then rested and after a brief opening address J. C. Hartley called the defendant, B. F. Smith, to the stand. He said he was defendant in the suit and resided in East Florenceville; had been two and a half years engaged in lumbering, but engaged on a small scale for six or seven years. He organized a company last fall as the B. F. Smith Co. Ltd. Had three mill and operated one in Gordonsville. Going up to Bath in the forenoon of the day in question and while driving in a carriage he asked Dyer who owned the logs now under dispute. Dyer said they were his. On my return I saw the joint of disputed logs was when I accompanied Tompkins when he scaled them. I was sixty or seventy feet away from the disputed joint. Never was nearer until after Dyer was arrested. Tompkins was on the raft and scaled about ten logs and averaged the others. I cut a scalp of the log on which Tompkins made his entry and signed his initials.

While I was on the raft I saw, what I considered was a river log and told Dyer to cut it out. He paid no attention. I again told him it was a river log and he shoved it out. I believed the disputed joint was part of my Bell logs. I still believe it. Even Foster admitted at the time that part of them were my Bell logs. I met Foster when I was going down the hill. He said he had arrested Dyer. On examination of the raft I told Foster that some were river logs and we cut them out. He then said he could not stop the raft from running but had subpoenaed some of the raftsmen as witnesses and fearing that they would not return in time for the justice's trial I did not then float the raft.

I never intimated to any man who worked for me to take river logs.

In April, 1906, I lost 500 logs out of the Monquart before the ice ran in the river; probably 100 of these were picked up afterwards. These were logs that I engaged Mr. Dyer, sr., to look after. He said he would get them, Coles. I gave him instructions to pick up nothing but my own logs. Practically all up the Monquart stream were mine, about twenty different marks in all. I always gave my men instructions not to take river logs.

When Foster told me about arresting Dyer, the officer and I agreed that if Dyer should plead guilty through ignorance of the law and throw himself on the mercy of the court, it would be lenient with him. After Dyer was under arrest I asked him if he took river logs for the raft and told him that he should not have taken either marked or unmarked logs. Dyer was then out on bail and he told me he consulted an up river lawyer who advised him to leave the country. I advised him to stay, so did Tompkins, and he promised that he would stay for trial but he did not.

To Mr. Carvell—He always gave instructions to his men not to take river logs. He did not think he was too honest, as compared to the average lumberman. He could not tell the difference between a raft of logs cut in Wicklow and one cut in Kent. When he saw the joint of disputed logs he had a suspicion that Dyer stole some of his Bell logs and was trying to sell them to him. I intended to run the raft myself and examine the logs, and would have cut them out if they were not mine. Dyer was in my employ since.

Other witnesses for the defence were: Adolphus Lovely, J. R. Tompkins of Peel, Jos. Curtis, of Bristol, Rev. Leverett A. Fenwick, of Bath, and Leonard Drost, of Wicklow. The evidence of the above witnesses was about the same as in the preliminary hearing.

Chief of police John W. Nickerson who is one of the staunchest of no-license men in the town, has been conducting a crusade against the liquor element and he had William G. Dana and Albert C. Mason in court charged with illegal sales of liquor, the charges being based on this same 60 per cent cough medicine. The chief carried a few bottles of the stuff to court with him as evidence. The defendants pleaded guilty and their cases were placed on file.

These little outings, as previously announced, are intended to combine instruction and pleasure, and the subject for Wednesday was geography.

About six o'clock a dainty little repast was partaken of and the party returned to the city shortly after 8 o'clock. All agreed that the first outing had been a success in every respect. The next will probably be held at Rockwood Park, on or about the 24th of this month.

THEY ALL BOUGHT IT

Men of Franklin, Mass., Accumulated Elegant Jags on Cough Medicine.

FRANKLIN, July 11.—Rock, rye and honey has been a popular remedy for coughs and colds in Franklin, but its day is past, for some observing officials have discovered that it contains 60 per cent of alcohol. They weren't the first to make the discovery by any means—in fact it was the discovery of this fact that brought so many sudden colds upon the people of Franklin and caused them to hurry to the druggist for the popular remedy.

Chief of police John W. Nickerson who is one of the staunchest of no-license men in the town, has been conducting a crusade against the liquor element and he had William G. Dana and Albert C. A PLEASANT OUTING

Guild of St. Audrey Holds Enjoyable Picnic in Rockwood Park.

The members of the Guild of St. Audrey, of the Mission Church of St. John Baptist, held the first of a series of summer outings on Wednesday last.

The girls assembled in the Sunday school hall, shortly before 2.30 o'clock and, with Miss Christian, the superior of the guild, proceeded to Seaside Park, where a very delightful afternoon was spent.

These little outings, as previously announced, are intended to combine instruction and pleasure, and the subject for Wednesday was geography.
