The Baroness Did Not Forget

BY L. A. HARKER.

The baron had gone to Homburg. The baroness, for some reason known only to herself, chose to visit her newly made friends, Lord and Lady Watcliffe, in Wensley Dale.

The baroness had never been in England before. She found the Yorkshire climate both cold and damp that September. Her host and hostess were kind and amiable, but it was not to see them that she had come. In her letter of invitation Lady Watcliffe had said:

"I hardly like to ask you come to Wensley Dale. It is only a small house, and we have no house party; our only other guest will be Prof. Ray. I think you said you had met him some years ago. Still, if you will venture, and if you still feel the desire you expressed in Paris to see our Yorkshire moors—know how charmed we shall be to see you. The weather is at its best now, so try to give us a day or two."

So the baroness went to Wensley Dale, and very dull she found it. However, as she was generally bored, she did not resent the ennui as do more happily constituted mortals. Besides, she had come for a reason and she could wait.

"It is very sad about Prof. Ray," said Lady Watcliffe. "He looks dreadfully ill, but he is so plucky he won't give in. You know he loves this part of the world, and all the country folk love him. He comes here every year, generally to us."

The baroness shivered. "What is the matter with him?" she asked.

"No one knows exactly, but it's something incurable, fatal. He looks so ill, but he never talks about himself and is the best company in the world; we are devoted to him."

"Do you know his wife?" asked the baroness, and there was a note of real interest in her voice.

"Not well. I've met her; she's little and young, and gay, and the children are beautiful!"

Lady Watcliffe sighed the sigh of the childless woman.

"Have you ever visited them?"

"Once. They have only a little house, such a pretty little gabled house. They are the cheeriest people and find something to laugh at all day long."

The baroness asked no more questions; she found it difficult to conceive of a man whose people found life so amusing.

Three days later Rupert Ray and the baroness were sitting on a big round stone in the middle of a heather-covered moor.

The sun shone and bees were busy in the heather. The baroness had taken off her long gloves and her white hands lay idly folded in her lap. Her tall sunshade, with its onyx handle, lay on the heather beside her; she had taken off her hat, and the sunshine glistened on the golden threads in her admirably dressed bronze-colored hair.

She sat looking at her own pretty hands. Now, when the baroness looked down you felt she could not possibly assume a prettier attitude. Her eyelashes were so long and so curly. But when she looked up, especially if she looked at you, it was plain that her greatest charm lay in the eyes themselves—so big and blue, and childlike.

Rupert Ray turned himself, regarding her with unfeigned pleasure. "It is good to see you again, Rosie; you are prettier than ever!"

"All you have not forgotten the little, funny name! Did you think that the schoolgirl you knew would grow into me?" and she turned her white hands inward, to emphasize the "me."

"You were hardly a schoolgirl at Capri, you impressed me as a very clever young lady indeed. By Jove! though, how time does fly! 10 years ago!"

"It may fly for you!" pouted the baroness; "it creeps and crawls for some people. Do you know," she continued,

"I hardly like to ask you come to Wensley Dale. It is only a small house, and we have no house party; our only other guest will be Prof. Ray. I think you said you had met him some years ago. Still, if you will venture, and if you still feel the desire you expressed in Paris to see our Yorkshire moors—know how charmed we shall be to see you. AS SHE STEPS FROM HER CARRIAGE.

Entering the lobby of the opera house just as she has stepped from her carriage the woman of fashion presents a strikingly charming picture which is not to be equalled for its beauty on any other occasion. Her costume is of soft, rich silk or satin, clinging chiton or lace, carefully designed to bring out the best figure lines, and over this she wears a coat or cape of fur or cloth ornate with rich trimmings. An example of the simplicity of design which characterizes evening wraps this season shows to advantage in the coat of oyster white broadcloth hanging in straight, graceful folds from shoulder to top of skirt hem. More than half the surface of this coat, including the loose Japanese sleeves, is covered with soutache braiding and exquisite dead white Japanese embroideries executed on a foundation of flit net over white satin. Heavy silk cord tassels are set on the fronts at the bustline, and the garment is lined throughout with gold and white brocade satin. A huge black hat of pleated malmesbury and satin trimmed with black ostrich and gold tissue ribbon complements the touch of black in the velvet throat band.

gabled house, where there was so much laughter, there is a silence as of tears. The baroness sheds no tears, but she has not forgotten.

Watch The Stomach.

IF you have either variable appetite, a faint gnawing feeling at the pit of the stomach, unsatisfied hunger, a loathing of food, rising and souring of food, a painful load at the pit of the stomach, choking sensations in the throat, headache, and dullness of spirits, constipated bowels with alternate diarrhoea, are you gloomy and miserable?

THEN YOU ARE A DYSPEPTIC.

The cure is careful diet, slow eating, thoroughly chewing the food; avoid drinking at meals.

Keep regular habits, shun stimulants, tone the digestive powers and regulate the stomach and bowels with Burdock Blood Bitters. It has cured the worst forms of dyspepsia, even of twenty-five years duration. Mrs. Geo. Parks, Cooper, Ont., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters and find that few medicines can give such great relief in dyspepsia and stomach troubles. I was troubled for a number of years with dyspepsia and could get no relief until I tried B.B.B. It helped me right away and I think it a wonderful remedy. I would recommend it to all sufferers from dyspepsia."

WILL VISIT HALIFAX

York Loan Commission Will Take Evidence There.

Toronto, Nov. 20.—(Special)—A commission will go to Halifax Saturday night to take evidence in the York Loan proceedings. A. E. Baedoe has been appointed commissioner and will be accompanied by William Douglas, C. B. Scott, C. A. Maston and L. A. Wyers.

V. Roblin of Oakville expressed the opinion today that the management was never authorized to do business outside the province, but acted on its own initiative. He was formerly secretary-treasurer of the York Loan.

An extra session of the Alabama legislature has been called to decide "whether the people or the railroads own the state." It would be well to find out first who owns the legislature.

NOVA SCOTIA APPEALS HEARD AT OTTAWA

Ottawa, Nov. 20.—The hearing of appeals from the Maritime Provinces was proceeded with in the supreme court today, the first case taken up being Corbin vs. Thompson, an appeal from the judgment of the supreme court of Nova Scotia.

The respondent sued for the price of machinery for a mill sold to the appellant with guarantee of the engine and boiler and the appellant counterclaimed for damages for breach of contract, as the engine did not work satisfactorily and had to be removed and taken away for repairs. When repaired it was found that owing to a difference in the steam feed a new boiler was necessary and, during these alterations the mill had to be shut down and the men kept on without employment but still drawing wages. The question for decision on the appeal was as to the mode of assessing the damages. The judgment appealed from allowed only what it would have cost the appellant to hire another engine, while he claims what he actually lost through the engine failing to come up to the guarantee. The judgment was reserved.

The appeal in the town of New Glasgow vs. Brown was next argued. The respondents, as councillors of the town were members of the water works committee which purchased a quantity of pipe to be used in laying a main for the water works and finding that they had more than they had made for laying, and the council refusing to vote more, they sold the surplus and placed the proceeds in a bank to the credit of the committee, the mayor refusing to accept it as money of the town. The action against them by the town was in trover for the value of the pipe so sold and for a declaration that they had no authority to sell it. The town contended that under the Nova Scotia statute property of the town can only be sold by consent of the lieutenant governor in council, or, if it can, the sale in this case was a breach of trust, as the funds out of which the pipe was furnished were raised by a special act for a special purpose. The judgment appealed from was against them on both points. Judgment was reserved.

The case of McMullen vs. Nova Scotia Coal Company was taken up shortly before the hour of adjournment.
