THE WHEEL O' FORTUNE

By LOUIS TRACY

Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," "The Captain of the Kansas," etc.

"Difficulty!" re-echoed the sheikh, "it might cost us many lives. A few men, leading spare camels with water-bags, might get through in safety, but it would be madness to attempt it with a big caravan. By the Prophet's beard, I did not like the prospect of this present march, though I knew there was water and food in plenty at Suleiman's Well. What, then, would happen if we found every well on the eastern road dry as a lime-kiln?"

"Yet you have been that way, you say?"

"Once, when I was young. But we were only a few Arabs, with a long string of camels."

"Did you find water?"

"Malish—I have forgotten. It is so long ago."

Royson rose to his feet and stretched himself. He wondered what Alfieri was disinterring at Suleiman's Well if the legion of AElius Gallus had followed the old world route described by the Arab. Perhaps it was all a mad dream, and this latest development but an added trick of fantasy. Abdur Kad'r looking up at him chuckled softly.

"Effendi," he cried, "if you are as strong as you look, you must be of the breed of that Frankish king whom our great Soldan, Yussuf Ibn Ayub, fought in Syria eight hundred years ago. Bismallah! I have seen many a proper man, but none with height and bone like you."

Now, Dick knew that Abdur Kad'r was speaking of Richard the First and Saladin, and it did seem a strange thing that the founder of his race should be named at that moment. He laughed constrainedly.

"You have guessed truly, my friend," he said. "I am indeed a descendent of that famous fighter. Alas, the days have long passed since men met in fair contest with lance and sword. If I were fool enough to seek distinction to-day in the battle-field I might be slain by any monkey of a man who could aim a rifle."

"We die as God wills," was the Arab's pious rejoinder, "yet I have been in more than one fight in which a Frank of your size could have won a name for himself. But I am growing old. My hot days are ended, and you giaours are erecting boundary pillars on the desert. The free people are dying. We are scattered and divided. Soon there will not be a genuine Arab left. May the wrath of Allah fall on all unbelievers!"

Then did Royson laugh again with a heartiness that drove that passion of retrospect from Abdur Kad'r dark features.

"Whatever happens, let not you and me quarrel," he cried. "We have enough on hand that we should keep our heads cool. And who can tell what this very day may bring forth? Things may happen ere we rejoin our caravan, Abdur Kad'r."

The sheikh bowed his head in confusion. It must have been the heat, he muttered, that caused his tongue to utter such folly. And, indeed, the excuse might serve, for the hot hours dragged most wearily, and the sun circled ever towards the hills, yet there came no sign of Hussain.

Royson was divided between his promise to Irene not to incur any avoidable risk and his natural wish to obtain the information so eagerly awaited in the camp. Though he meant to begin the return journey at sunset, here was five o'clock, and he no wiser than yesterday at the same hour. At last, inaction grew irksome. He helped Abdur Kad'r to saddle the camels, and they mounted, with intent to climb the northerly ridge, and thus survey the road which Hussain must pursue if he managed to get away from Italian surveillance before nightfall.

They proceeded warily. On gaining the opposing height they found that a broad plateau, flanked by a steep hill on the seaward side barred any distant view, but Abdur Kad'r felt assured that the crest of this next hill would give them command of the whole range of broken country for many miles ahead. With this objective, they urged the camels into a trot. When the shoulder of the rising ground became almost impassable for four-footed animals, and awkward beasts at that, they dismounted, tied the camels to heavy stones, and climbed the remainder of the way on foot.

They looked across a narrow valley into a wide and shallow depression, where a clump of palm trees and dense patches of sayall bushes instantly revealed the whereabouts of the oasis. It was easy to see the regular lines of newly turned rubble and sand where trenches had been cut by the explorers. But the place was deserted. Not a man or horse, camel or tent, stood on the spot where the mirage had revealed a multitude some twenty-six hours earlier.

Royson was so perplexed by the discovery that his gaze did not wander from the abandoned camp. Abdur Kad'r quicker than he to read the tokens of the desert, pointed to a haze of dust that hung in the still air far to the north.

"The Italians have gone, Effendi," he said. "Perhaps they, too, were looking for an oasis with five hills. Behold, they have found one by a fool's counting, for this is the fifth hill within two kilometers of Suleiman's Well. The ways of Allah are wonderful. Can it be that they have discovered that which you seek?"

A sharp pang of disappointment shot through Royson's breast. He was about to tell Abdur Kad'r that they must now regain their camels and hasten to the oasis while there was sufficient light to examine the excavations, when the sheikh suddenly pulled him down, for Dick had stood upright on a boulder to obtain an uninterrupted field of vision.

"Look!" he growled. "Four of them! And, by the Holy Kaaba, they mean mischief!"

Royson's eyes were good, clearer, in all probability, than the Arab's, but they were not trained to detect moving objects with such minute precision. Nevertheless, in a few seconds he made out the hoods of four men who were peering over the crest which separated the small valley from the larger one. They disappeared, and, while Royson and Abdur Kad'r were speculating on the motive that inspired this espionage, the hoods came in sight again, but this time they had the regular swing that betokened camel-riders. The four halted on the sky-line, and seemingly exchanged signals with others in the rear. Then they resumed their advance. They were fully armed; they carried their guns across the saddle-bow, and Dick saw that their cloaks were differently fashioned to those which he had taken note of hitherto.

"Hadendowas!" murmured Abdur Kad'r "They are good fighters, Effendi, but born thieves. And how many ride behind? Not for twenty years have I met Hadendowas on this track."

The Arab's keen eyes did not cease to glare fixedly beyond the ridge. Soon he whispered again:

"They may not have seen us, Effendi, but we must be ready for them. Go you, and lead our camels into the hollow there" and he thrust his chin towards the seaward base of the hill. "I shall soon know if they are playing fox with us. Our camels are of the Bisharin breed, while theirs are Persian, so we can always out strip them if it comes to a race. You understand, Effendi; they came from Suleiman's Well. Perchance evil hath befallen Hussain."

Abdur Kad'r's advice was so obviously reasonable that Dick obeyed it, though unwillingly. He took the camels to the place indicated by his companion, and had no difficulty in finding a cleft in which they were quite hidden from the ken of any who followed the main track.

Soon he heard the sheikh hurrying after him.

"Had we awaited Hussian another half hour we should have been dead or captured by this time, Effendi," was his bewildering news. "A white man and nearly seventy Hadendowas, all armed, and leading pack camels, follow close behind the scouts. With them are Hussain and another, but their arms are bound, and they are roped to their beasts. The Giaour—may he be withered—rides my Bisharin camel."

Then Royson knew by intuition what had happened. Alfieri had failed in his quest. The Italian commander of the troops refusing to sanction unless labor any longer, had marched north with his men. Alfieri, still clinging desperately to a chimera, had decided to remain and scour the desert until his stores gave out. And, at this crucial moment in his enterprise, came Hussain, the unconscious emissary of his rivals. The fact that the Arab was a prisoner spoke volumes. He had tried to communicate with Abdullah, and the watchful Italian had guessed his true mission. The man might have been tortured until he confessed the whereabouts not only of Royson himself and Abdur Kad'r, but of the whole expedition. There was but one thing to do, and that speedily.

"Up!" he shouted, dragging the camels forth to an open space. "You ride in front and set the pace."

"What would you do, Effendi?" cried the sheikh in alarm. "They will see us ere we have gone five hundred meters. Let us wait for the night."

"Up, I tell you," roared Royson, catching the Arab's shoulder in a steel grip. "In another ten minutes they will know we have fled, and they will hurry south at top speed. What chance have we of passing them in this country at night? Our sole hope is to head them. No more words but ride. Believe me, Abdur Kad'r, it is life or death for you, and it matters little to me whether you die here, or in the next valley, or not at all."

Then the Arab knew that he had met his master. He climbed to the saddle, said words not in the Koran, and urged his camel into a frenzied run. Royson, who could not have persuaded his own long-legged steed to adopt such a pace, found it easy enough to induce the beast to follow his brother.

In this fashion, riding like madmen, they traversed the plateau and had almost begun the descent into the wady where they had spent the day, when a distant yell reached them. There was no need to look back, even if such a hazardous proceeding were warranted by their break-neck gait. They were discovered, but they were in front, and that counts for a good deal in a race. They tore down the hill, lumbered across the dried-up bed of a long-vanished torrent, and pressed up the further side. As they neared the ridge, four rifle shots rang out, and Dick saw three little spurts of dust and stones kick up in front on the right, while a white spatter suddenly shone on a dark rock to the left.

The young Queen of Spain thoroughly enjoys a quiet holiday at the home of her childhood in the Isle of Wight. The Spanish court is the most brilliant in the world—clinging, despite the well-known democratic tendencies of King Alphonson, to the rigidly formal traditions of the Middle Ages. In consequence the plain and homelike surroundings of her old home are very restful to the queen, who flits there whenever her duties at court permit her to do so. She has given the Spanish nation much offence by her disapproval of bull-fighting. It takes all her exceptional qualities as a wife and a mother to propitiate a nation, hurt beyond measure by her dislike of their national pastime.

THE TOUCH OF JET.

Black is "it." Not a bit of doubt about that; but it is the touch of black, not the all black costume—the "soupcon" of sombre color which, as the French woman will assure you, makes more striking the whole color scheme. With brown—a color heretofore not associated with black—is black considered especially chic. The big hat pictured, in one of the warm cedar brown shades, is made quite striking by two huge cabochons of sparkling cut jet.

WILL NOT AFFECT SHIPMENTS HERE

St. John Cattle Business Will not be Deceased by Foot and Mouth Disease.

It is not considered likely that the outbreak of foot and mouth disease in the states of New York and Pennsylvania will affect the cattle shipments from St. John this winter unless the disease should spread to the west. The animals received at the winter port for shipment are sent from Western Canada and the Western States. There is practically no export trade through St. John from the two states which are now under quarantine. Strict instructions, however, have been issued to Canadian quarantine officers to make rigid inspections of all animals and the C. P. R. officials have also been notified that all cars must be disinfected on the border.

The cattle received in St. John for local consumption come exclusively from Western Canada and are not affected by the outbreak south of the line. In the unlikely event of the State of Maine being placed under quarantine the shipments to St. John would come via the I. C. R. as was the case some years ago when imports from the States were prohibited.

An I. C. R. official in discussing the question of St. John's position regarding the shipment of cattle, in view of the embargo, said last night that there need be no falling off in the shipments of Canadian cattle as the I. C. R. could bring them here from Montreal as quickly as the C. P. R., so in case the C. P. R. could not bring them through the state of Maine, they could come via the I. C. R. without any trouble. He said that three years ago when there was an embargo on American cattle, the I. C. R. brought many train loads here from Montreal, the average time for the trip being forty-five hours, while the quickest run was made in thirty-six hours and the slowest in fifty-eight.

It would not be necessary to build sheds on the east side of the harbor, he claimed, as the cattle could be taken direct to the Sand Point sheds, via the C. P. R. bridge. It was pointed out that last year some 200 carloads of cattle were brought here over the I. C. R., also that all shipments of cattle from Ontario points on the Grand Trunk must of necessity be delivered to the I. C. R. for forwarding here, according to the terms of the agreement between the companies. With the exception of American cattle, he claimed the shipments need show no falling off from other seasons.

OBITUARY

Samuel Carsley

Montreal, Nov. 20.—(Special.)—The death occurred tonight of Samuel Carsley, the proprietor of S. Carsley Co., Ltd., one of the largest departmental stores in Canada.

Mr. Carsley was thrown from his carriage a few days ago and although he sustained slight injuries, the shock proved fatal.

Mr. Carsley came to Canada from England when twenty-two years of age and has been active in business circles in this city since 1871. He was one of the pioneers of the department store system. He was 73 years old.

J. Walker Donald

The death of J. Walker Donald, son of the late Rev. William Donald, D.D. for many years pastor of St. Andrew's church, occurred yesterday in Detroit (Mich.). Mr. Donald resided in St. John for some years after his father's death in 1871, and then went to Boston where he was appointed agent for the Chicago & Alton railroad. He afterwards went to reside in Chicago and Detroit. In recent years he had been in failing health and had retired from business.

Mr. Donald leaves his wife and one son, Harry, in Detroit. Mrs. Robert Thomson, of this city, is a sister. John A. Donald, of Tacoma, a brother, is well known here, having resided in St. John for many years. Miss Linda A. Donald, another sister, is at present staying with Mrs. Thomson.

The funeral will take place in Detroit.

William Craft

C. William Craft, a well known lumber surveyor, died at the residence of his brother, J. Oliver Craft, Water street, West End, yesterday morning, after a lingering illness. He leaves two sisters—Mrs. Thomas Fairweather, of West End, and Mrs. Willard Ellison, of Cambridge (Mass.), also two brothers—J. Oliver and H. Alfred Craft. He had reached the advanced age of seventy-five years and seven months. Mr. Craft was universally respected. He was a life long resident of Carleton, and will be greatly missed, not only by his own relatives, but also by the community at large. He never married, but had lived during the past forty-four years with his brother at whose home he died. Much sympathy will be felt for the family in their bereavement. The funeral will be held at 2.30 o'clock, Monday.

AT THE NICKEL

There will be one continuous procession of children to the Nickel this afternoon, for it is going to be Pat Harrington's farewell appearance in St. John; in fact it will take on the form of a regular goodbye reception. The little comedian will sing several of his best songs and will meet all his tiny friends before starting on the C. P. R. The pictures, too, will be a strong attraction, including the Bear Hunt In The Canadian Rockies, a romance of the Canadian northland, entitled "The Ingrate," and a very funny comedy or two. It is an educational programme throughout and at the same time an amusing one. Miss Foley will sing a new song as will also Mr. Cairns. The Dramagraph feature is entitled Outwitted By His Wife, a pretty social drama with nothing in it to offend childish eyes or ears, in fact, as announced a few days ago, the Nickel is eliminating from all its matinee programme features that are sensational.

AT THE OPERA HOUSE

At the matinee this afternoon in the Opera House, the W. S. Harkins Company will present the beautiful comedy drama, "The Three of Us." Tonight for the farewell performance the fascinating melo-drama, "Darkest Russia" has been selected. It is a play that grips the heart, a drama with a plot and interesting climaxes. It shows the merciless and despotic laws, the machinations and intrigues of the secret police, and the cruel exiling of innocent men and women. The full strength of the company will appear. The play is in five strong acts.

NEXT TUESDAY'S CONCERT

A very interesting feature about the great Miller—McClaskey Concert next Tuesday, which is the talk of St. John's musical circles, is the fact that four of the principal artists are St. John born, and it redounds greatly to the credit of the city and goes a long way towards redeeming it of the stigma attaching to it of being an unmusical centre, that it can claim four such artists for its own. This makes an irresistible argument why there should be a capacity audience next Tuesday, indeed the house is not far from sold out now, only a few seats left.
