MASCULINE MODES

For some years now the fashionable American tailor has been turning us out in coats well-padded at the shoulders, and cut in such a shape that we have had a pronounced waist line and very prominent hips. The smart young Americans who traveled abroad were often commented upon because of the American cut of their clothes. In every European center the ultra-fashionable had their clothes made in London and cut in the severe English style. Now the London and Paris tailors have adopted the American cut to a great extent. Truly a triumph for the American tailor. The very latest of the late coats in London and Paris are modeled on the American cut—that is, with the waist line and the large hips. As to the shoulders, they are not padded and square, but sloping. In fact, the latest cut is almost as close as it can get to a woman's tailor-made.

The wasp waist, the sloping shoulder and the prominent hip are quite the feature of the summer coat, particularly the sack or lounge coat. Here is the startling statement of a prominent London tailor: "Men are taking more thought over their figures, especially men under 30. The man with square shoulders and straight, erect figure is going out of fashion. He must, if he be fashionably dressed, study the clothes of his sister. He must wear corsets and allow his shoulders to droop slightly. His clothes should also be cut so as to fall in voluminous folds round the hips. He should lean forward slightly in walking. While men's clothes have a tendency toward effeminacy, women's tailors are showing a leaning toward masculine cuts. The newest designs for women have scarcely any waist and broad, square-set shoulders."

What do you think of a morning coat fastened with one link at the waist line, in the same way that a single-breasted frock coat is fastened? That is one of the new styles of morning coat, and I daresay that men who must be a little different from their fellows—at any cost—in order to be happy, will have their morning coats made in this way. I have seen one and I cannot say that I care for it. The coat was made with very large tails, brought well forward in front, and it was, therefore, a very "skirty" coat. It seems to me that if you must have a coat fastened with a loop in front, you may just as well have a smart frock coat. Some of the best double-breasted frock coats are being made in such a way that their wearers will never button them up. They are not intended to be buttoned. At the same time, they are double-breasted frock coats, and are, therefore, quite different in appearance from the single-breasted variety.

If I was asked which was the more comfortable of the two—a coat with two buttons in front or a coat with three—I should say that undoubtedly the coat with two. The average man does not feel comfortable if he has on a coat that buttons tightly across his chest. But he does not at all mind if coat is buttoned tightly at the waist. A coat made in this way acts as a very slight support, and makes him walk better. I think that the morning coat of the season will have only two buttons, but you can get almost the same effect with additional comfort if you have only the two buttons, and have the bottom one put much higher on the coat than it is usual to have it.

The lapel of the lounge coat with only two buttons may be a trifle longer than that of the coat with three buttons. But if the coat is made well this is no drawback. A good tailor can make a coat with long lapels in such a way that there is not too much "play" in the lapels—even if the coat is buttoned low down—and, therefore, it fits just as closely as the coat which, being cut with a small opening, is fastened with three buttons.

ONLY NATURAL.

Brother Tom—That girl is a great belle, and yet she has such an abrupt way of dealing with her admirers.

Sister Nell—Well, it is only natural for a June belle to have summary ways.

HE CANOED IT

"You know," said the young man with the far-away look in his eyes, "I've been wanting to do the canoe business for the last three years. That is, I've been wanting to camp out beside some lake and have all the fun I wanted with an Indian craft. Well, I got an early start this year, and am just home from my trip."

"You took along a canoe, did you?" was asked.

"I did. It cost me two weeks' salary, but was warranted to be straight goods. The man who sold it to me said it was a dream. That was the only thing he said about it that proved true. Yes, it was a dream. I had fifty different dreams about it."

"Was anything wrong about it?"

"Oh, no. It was a regular canoe. I had it in the lake within 15 minutes after we got there. Within 16 I was in the water after it. That was the beginning. After I had been rolled out about 20 times in succession I determined to conquer the thing or bust."

"And you conquered, of course?"

"Did I? Well, I must tell the truth and acknowledge that I didn't. The thing got on my nerves. I thought of it by day and dreamed of it by night. It took my appetite away. It spoiled my two weeks. It made me cuss and rip. I even struck my own brother."

"But what was the matter?"

"The matter? Did you ever try to ride in a canoe?"

"Never."

"I thought not. Don't do it. Seven hundred and eighty times that canoe rolled me out. I never paddled it a distance of 10 feet. It mocked me. It grinned and leered at me. I never even got fairly seated in it. If I stood on the bank and looked at it it would turn bottom-side up."

"And you finally—?"

"Chopped it up with the ax and came home a meaner, but a wiser, young man. No more canoes for me. I prefer steamboats." JOE KERR.

RAGE.

In a rainstorm a girl of renown
Insisted on going to town
But the umbrella's leaks
Wet the bloom on her cheeks.,
And it drippled down and ruined her gown.

As we've seen, the young girl was no saint,
And she lodged a most mighty complaint.
She raved and she swore
At the man in the store
For not selling her waterproof paint.

NOT FOR HIM.

First Hobo (poetically)—Ah, how I love June. 'Tis me favorite month.

Second Hobo (sighing)—'Tain't mine. I always have to go barefooted troo dat month.

First Hobo—Barefooted? Why, how is that?

Second Hobo—Why, you see, people throw all deir old shoes at de June brides.

SOMEWHERE.

Somewhere the world is bright, dear,
And fair the flowers blow,
The valleys sing delight, dear,
Across the hills of snow.
Still light from dark we borrow
Along the lonesome way.
The music of to-morrow
Charms the trouble of to-day.
—Atlanta Constitution.

Saluting the Bride

At a village station a husky young man and a robust young woman boarded the train, and they had only taken their seats when his arm went around her waist and her head fell on his shoulder. The other passengers became interested at once, and a general grin passed around the coach. Some peppermint drops, carried in the young man's vest pocket and doled out one by one, had been eaten before he caught on the smiles. Then he stood up and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, this is my wife. We was married an hour ago. She is a June bride. We married for love. I hain't no pictur' and she hain't purty, but that's our business. Your congratulations are now in order."

The smiles faded away and no one moved—no one but the husky husband. He slowly removed his coat, rolled back his sleeves and continued:

"There's twelve men in this here car, and I want every durned one of 'em to come forward and salute the bride. It's her due, and it's got to be done or you will have to settle with me. Nancy, get ready to be saluted."

Nancy rose up with a blush, and those 12 men, one after another, left their seats and came forward and gave her a brotherly kiss and wished her all happiness. When the circus was over the husband rolled down his sleeves, resumed his coat and sat down with the remark:

"The bride, having been duly saluted according to custom, will now undergo further hugging, and if any galoot sees anything in it to smile at, he will be informed that my name is Moses Green, and that in a rough-and-tumble I weigh a ton." JOE KERR.

THE GARDEN OF FEUD.

"Don't forget that 'chickens always come home to roost,'" snapped the angry suburbanite as he shook his finger over the garden fence.

"Not always," chuckled his neighbor, as he cleaned the gore from his axe. "Your flock that came over here to feast on my seeds won't come home to roost."

NUTRIOTONE

Is Bringing the Pasture to the Stable

Here is results of Bennett's second trip among the Nutriotone customers who have made a thorough use of it since last October. Halifax people are getting great results, stating they would not be without it at twice the cost. Mr. Worman, of Lounsbury Co., Ltd., Moncton, says it does better work than any preparation he ever used. The Lounsbury Co., Ltd. who have just sent in another and larger order, are to handle it in all their territory from Moncton to Campbellton. See a few letters from reliable horsemen.

Truro, N. S., June 3, 1908.

Messrs. W. D. Carpenter & Co., Syracuse, N. Y.

Gentlemen,—We started using Nutriotone last October and are most pleased with the results from this wonderful Tonic. Since we started feeding it we have had some twenty horses in our stables and have given each one a course of Nutriotone, and, in every case, the results have been most satisfactory. We consider that for putting a run-down horse into condition it has no equal. We have recommended and sold it to many of the leading farmers and horsemen in this section, and since introducing it to them our sales of Nutriotone have steadily increased and where fairly tried has given good results. We are feeding it to "Arclight" 2.19, sire of the speedy "Marguerite" 2.22¾, and he has never been in better condition than he is this spring.

Nutriotone is all right.

We use it—We sell it. Yours very truly, McMULLEN & FRASER.

Truro, N. S., June 3, 1908.

Messrs. W. D. Carpenter & Co., Syracuse, N. Y.

Gentlemen,—I have been using your Nutritone since last fall, with the best of results, and have advised others to try it, and it has given us much better satisfaction than anything we have ever used.

My horses have done much better, with less grain than formerly, and for a poor hidebound mare it did wonders and all who try it, where I have recommended it, are much pleased. Yours truly, NEWTON LEE.

Moncton, N. B., June 10, 1908.

Messrs. W. D. Carpenter & C., Syracuse, N. Y.

Gentlemen,—Last fall my horses were all run down after a hard summer's work in the ice business, and your agent persuaded me to buy a tub of Nutriotone, which I have used with several more, and it has put my horses up into fine, slick condition; cleaned out worms, and I would not be without it, as I am convinced that it is a far better tonic than I have ever used before.

Sincerely yours, SHERMAN BLAKENY.

THE SHEATH SKIRT.

(From the New York World.)

Just wait; the sheath skirt's coming,
In London just at present,
And likewise in Paree,
The sheath skirt exhibitions
Have shocked the modesty
Of those not in the fashion,
Until the comme il faut
Have trembled like an aspen
Beneath the awful blow.

Just how this latest garment
Compares with peekaboos
And clockworks for expanding
Our erstwhile narrow views
We cannot say for certain,
Because up till today
No sheath skirt's operating
Along the Great White Way.

They say—but this is gossip—
That sheath skirts fit so tight
That lovely woman—gracious!
This really isn't right—
That lovely woman's figure—
O, say, this really is
Not fit for publication,
So pray cut out this biz.

But let it be whatever
It may be, when it hits
This little old New Yorkie
We'll see the fit of fits.
By heck! we're out for progress,
And London and Paree
Ain't in it with this country
In having things to see.

We have the true ambition
In all we undertake,
And we will go one better
On anything they make.
Just wait; the sheath skirt's coming,
And when it strikes this shore
We'll make that foreign garment
Look like a clothing store..

On Sunday, Rev. G. F. Scovil, rector of St. Jude's church, Carleton, conducted service at Fredericton Junction and Blissville. His services here were taken by Rev. J. Edward Hand in the morning and Rev. J. W. B. Stewart in the evening.
