The Bavarian branch of the Deutsche bank, in Munich, has made a successful effort to introduce a system of paying by postcard checks. The Frankfurter Zeitung announces that in the interest of the universal extension of the check system, this bank abandons to the public the general plan which was protected by an imperial copyright that has been elaborated by it for its own use, as well as for the check association of the various banks and bankers co-operating with the Deutsche bank. There is, therefore, no longer any legal obstruction to the general use of the postcard check.
