AMUSEMENTS

AT THE OPERA HOUSE

Good Production of "The Burglar and the Lady" By the Myrkle-Harder Co.

The Myrkle-Harder Company opened a brief engagement in the Opera House last evening, producing "The Burglar and the Lady," before a very large audience. The Burglar and the Lady is a four-act comedy drama built in heroic mould, but contains some particularly bright lines. It was originally used to exploit James J. Corbett, the pugilist, and like his other pieces, "Naval Cadet" and "Pals" calls for a hero who does things from the rise to the fall of the curtain. The two principal male characters are our friends of fiction, A. J. Raffles and Sherlock Holmes, but they are introduced into an environment where their creators would hardly recognize them. Sherlock Holmes, for the purpose of the play, is transferred to America and attached to the Boston force. Raffles, of course, is bent on robbery, but he retains the Quixotic touch which Hornung gives to the original character, and burgles simply for the love of the game. Holmes is called upon to track him down and the frequent meeting between the two furnish an abundant opportunity for capable work. The role of Raffles was, last evening, entrusted to Louis Anker, while John Bertin played Sherlock Holmes. Both gentlemen acquitted themselves well and played the characters in a highly finished manner. As Norma Gray, the "lady," Miss Myrkle was usual, captivating. She had a good scene early in the third act, with Mr. Anker, and later in the same act, with Mr. Anker and Mr. Flagg, and she won the hearty approval of her audience for the artistic way in which she handled it. Frank Christie, Richard Marsden, Samuel Barlow and Bruce Morgan were adequate in the supporting male roles, while Beth Somerville and June Swift had the minor parts among the ladies. Amelia Bard was seen as Annie, the German maid, and did a particularly good character bit. The piece was well staged and costumed, some of the gowns worn being of the latest mode. In the first act Miss Myrkle appeared in a particularly fetching directoire gown. Between the acts specialties were presented by Bruce Morgan and Emma Myrkle in songs and dances, Frank Christie, comedy monologue, and Bedell Bros. in an acrobatic turn, which was above the average. Taken altogether, Mr. Harder's line of entertaining this season compares favorably with his best previous offerings and good business will probably be the rule during his engagement.

Tonight "The Burglar and the Lady" will be repeated, and tomorrow evening's bill will be "One Girl in a Thousand," written especially for Miss Myrkle.

FEAST OF IRISH MUSIC AT THE NICKEL TODAY

This is Irish music day at the Nickel for tomorrow (Wednesday) the theatre is handed over to the Catholic societies for their theatricals in aid of the orphanages. The Nickel's fine orchestra will render the following national airs in honor of St. Patrick's anniversary: Overture, Strains from Killarney; waltz, Eileen Mavourneen; Medley march, introducing Wearing of the Green, The Low-Backed Car, Kilkenny for Me, etc. Robert Buchanan will sing by special request Moore's Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms. The big feature of the programme, however, will be Holmes and Buchanan's delightful operetta, A Woodland Wooing, which made a sensational hit last evening. Fully one thousand people were unable to gain admittance so strong a magnet did this specialty prove, and those who heard it were entranced with the sparkling libretto and melodious musical introductions. It is the story of a gypsy princess and a strolling landscape artist and teems with merry witticisms and happy surprises. Mr. Buchanan sang The Isle of Love, Miss Holmes The Gypsy Fortune Teller, and in duet they sang Love's Old Sweet Song.

This act will be repeated this afternoon at 4 o'clock and tonight at 8.15 and 9.15. Mr. Courtnais in the sea ballad Anchored and four motion pictures.

ORCHESTRA AT THE STAR TOMORROW

The Star Theatre in Union Hall, North End, will conclude its opening bill tonight with a couple of special pictorial features and the new song by Miss Von Branders. Tomorrow it will have an entirely new programme of pictures—a fine St. Patrick's Day bill—and in the evening there will be a complete orchestra to render a list of favorite Irish airs. The musicians will be professionals and the Star management promises the richest evening's pleasure yet. This cosy little North End theatre has won its way to the hearts of the people on sheer merit, and tomorrow's fine musical features will indicate that it is not yet done in catering to the tastes of the people of the northern end of town who appreciate good pure amusements.
