PRINCESS ZARA

BY ROSS BEECKMAN.

"I understand you, dear, perfectly." She turned away from the window again and faced me, and her eyes were glowing with the light of love. Again for the moment we were face to face with the perils that menaced us from the outside, and before that consideration all else faded to nothingness with Zara. A little while ago she had repudiated me, but all-conquering Love had stepped in again, had overpowered her, enthralled her, and I could see that she was more than ever mine own, now.

For a space we looked into each other's eyes across the short distance that separated us. We were reading each other's souls, and both saw and understood all that the heart of love could desire. It was an undiscovered country to each of us, upon which we trod just then; a new creation that was the sweeter because of its strangeness.

"I love you!" Zara whispered, and she came nearer until her hands rested upon my shoulders, until her face was close to mine so that I could feel her sweet breath against me. Her lips were parted slightly in a half smile, and I knew that she had forgotten the waiting kareta with its freight of assassins. I took her in my arms, slowly, tenderly, firmly. I held her pressed closely against me for a moment and then my lips sought hers, and hers sought mine. It was a oneness of desire, a singleness of purpose that brought us together, and we remained so while minutes spread. I closed my eyes and held her the more closely against me, so that I could feel the throbbing of her heart and the quivering eagerness of her little body, warm against my own. We forgot the dangers and perils that surrounded us; forgot the world and all it contained; forgot life and death, cares and their empires, nihilists and their plots, remembering nothing, in that great spasm of adoration. We did not speak. There was no occasion for words. There was no opportunity to utter them. But we breathed and breathed together. Our hearts throbbed in unison. Our souls communed, intermingled, blended into one. We sighed together, thought together, until my own senses reeled under the strain of it. The magnificence of that moment! The rapture of her caress, and the great joy of mine to her!

Presently I felt her clinging arms relax and I guided her tenderly toward a huge chair. I lifted her as if she were a child and put her softly down among the cushions, and I dropped to my knees, still holding her, still with my arms wound tightly around her.

For a long time after that we were silent, and Zara was the first to rouse from her mental reverie.

"Dubravnik," she said, and you can have no idea how sweetly that name was made to sound by her utterance of it, "I have not yet completed the story I was telling you; but there is only a little more, and you must hear it."

"Yes," I replied. "As you will, Zara. I am content." But the time you were last seen by your friends, and the events that happened in the palace that day, nothing is known. What streets you traversed on your way there; how you gained admittance to the palace, which was guarded as strictly as it is now; how you passed the guards and gained access even to the cabinet of the emperor, are mysteries which have never been solved, and never will be this side of the grave. All that is known is that you wore your old uniform, the same one from which the czar once tore the buttons, and it is possible that it had something to do with passing you through. At all events you did pass them, and you did reach the person of the emperor himself. Ah, it must have been grand! I would that I could have been with you then! I would that I could have seen and heard all that took place there, at that time—the only time when the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth has been told to his august majesty. There was one of our agents there who heard it all; that is how I know about it now."

The emperor was alone when you entered, and you had closed and locked the door of the cabinet before he discovered your presence. He did not know that you were there until a sharp command from you caused him to raise his head; but it was only to see you standing there with the pistol in your hand aimed at his head, and to hear you say that if he uttered one cry for assistance, or attempted to call for help in any way, you would shoot."

Zara leaped to her feet and strode rapidly across the room twice, wringing her hands. She paused, confronting me.

"Oh, my God!" she cried. "To think, if you had only told your friends of the errand, and of the plans you had made for reaching the presence of the czar, that it would have succeeded and you would have killed him—killed him!"

She rushed again to my side, and seized me by the shoulders, so that she turned my face until it exactly confronted hers.

"Dubravnik," she cried. "I can almost believe that I am indeed talking to him—to the man whose history I am relating—when I look at you. In some ways you are like him, so like him! But I will still deceive myself with the idea that I am really talking to him about himself. It is easier so. Oh, my love, be patient with me. I must forget for the moment that you are the man I love. I must compel myself to believe that I am talking to him—to the brother of Yvonne."

COAL-DUST GRAY FROCK FOR SECOND MOURNING.

Coal dust is the new dark gray, so dark as to be almost black. This graceful frock of permo finished fabric in the sober coal dust color is well suited for dressy indoor wear and informal dinners when mourning is beginning to be laid aside. The lines of the costume are extremely simple and graceful, the touch of embroidery on the bodice and the yoke of Yak lace underneath gray chiffon being the only ornamentation. The tucked sleeves add distinction, with their lavishly used material.

A New York woman worker in the tenements has been saving the lives of hundreds of orphan children by teaching them how to be good cooks. She is Miss Winifred S. Gibbs, of the visiting staff of the New York Association for Improving the Conditions of the Poor. Miss Gibbs has worked out the problem of cheap living.

Any small family can live on from ten to fifteen cents a day each, she has found, if the right materials are bought for the table and the right use is made of them.

"It is not the most expensive food that is the best," says she. "During the wreck of the liner Republic the stokers had to be fed, as it was their work, that kept the ship afloat and the passengers alive. 'So the cabin passengers had to share their fine breakfasts and poultry with the stokers. After a day of this fare the stokers were unable to do their work as they had with coarser food. Wholesome food will do a family more good than fancy cooking."

To Suffer From Headaches Makes Life Miserable.

It takes a person that has had or is subject to headaches to describe the suffering which attends them.

The majority of cases are caused by constipation and dyspepsia. The dull throbbings, the intense pain, sometimes in one part, sometimes in another, and then over the whole head, varying in its severity by the cause which brings it on, purely indicates that there is something the matter with the stomach or bowels. To the fact that Burdock Blood Bitters reaches every part of the system is due its success in relieving and permanently curing headache. It has proven a specific for the malady in all its forms.

CONSTITUTION AND HEADACHES.

Mrs. Allison E. Brown, Summerville, N.B., writes:—"I have been troubled with Constipation and Headaches for a long time. After trying different doctors to no effect, a friend asked me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I find I am completely cured after taking three bottles. I can safely recommend it to all."

THE LADIES ARE MUCH AGITATED

W. C. T. U. Workers Indignant at Action of G. T. Railway Officials

Sherbrooke, June 24.—The ladies of Sherbrooke County Women's Christian Temperance Union are very much agitated over the fact that the officials of the G. T. R. here have given orders that the boxes containing temperance tracts must be removed from the station waiting rooms and also cards for the purpose of directing the attention of strangers to the Y. M. C. A. building. Whether the temperance literature was the means of any passing traveler turning over a new leaf to the side of temperance or not, the fact remains that the object and intention of the Union was a good one. It is hardly possible that the officials would countenance such action, when they lay down such strict rules in regard to temperance among their own employees. Perhaps the worst feature of the whole case is that removing the Y. M. C. A. cards. In these days of confidence men and women who are out to beat the unwary stranger everything possible should be done to protect the innocent traveler. These cards were useful in that many a young girl or woman who had nowhere to go but the waiting room of the station while waiting possibly half a day for a train connection could by these cards find a hearty welcome at the home of the Y. M. C. A. and there spend their time in comfort. One can hardly credit such an action, and it is to be hoped that when the matter is investigated that expulsion of the Union's literature was brought about by some misunderstanding. While the Sherbrooke county ladies are not of the suffragette color, still they are persistent and determined enough to fight this question to a finish. They claim that there will be some wig on the green before they will be through with this question. The attitude of the G. T. R. will be made known to every Union in the Dominion, and with the support of the various unions they are of the opinion that they will get relief.

BES SWARMED ON BABY; BABY STUNG

Infant Was Playing in Bee Yard When Swarm of Bees Got After Him.

Detroit, Mich., June 24.—The fifteen-month-old child of Cornelius Van Deewen, who is lying at the point of death, swelled out all semblance to a human being as the result of being stung by hundreds of bees.

The child was playing in the yard of her home where bees are kept, when they swarmed on her.

DOCTOR LOCATES A LIE BY MEANS OF THE X-RAY

Cincinnati, June 24.—"Doctor do you ever do anything for charity? I am an awfully poor woman, and have heart trouble. Won't you please examine my heart with the X-ray?"

This plea was made by a poorly dressed woman of about sixty-five to Dr. George Hermann, of Corryville.

"Yes, I will examine you," said the doctor.

"But, doctor, I do not wish to take off my waist; you can make the examination without taking it off, can't you?" asked the woman.

"It would be better to take it off, but if you insist, leave it on," was the reply. "Remember, doctor, that I am too poor to pay for this," she repeated, as the X-ray machine began to crackle and the physician gazed at her heart, watching its contractions and expansions.

Happening to look a bit lower he was greatly surprised to discover the outline of two $20 gold pieces hidden in a chambray bag under the woman's garment.

"How is my heart, doctor?"

"Your heart is pretty bad," he ejaculated with a tinge of sarcasm.

"Is there any hope for me?"

"Not if you keep on this piece," he declared as the third $20 gold piece came into view. "I read in the paper that you have a bad heart. You lied when you said you were poor. Take that money out of your waist and pay me $5."

The woman nearly collapsed. She took out the $60 in gold and from another part of her garment drew out a purse containing bills. Altogether she had about $100.

Accident Hunting a Profession

Lately there has been formed the Alliance Against Accident Fraud, organized for the peculiar purpose of detecting frauds in damage suits against big corporations. For there is a profession of falling off trolley cars, falling from an elevator, striking one's self against a bolt of cloth in a large department store and many other kinds of accidents. And it is this profession that the Alliance seeks to break up.

In the past few years large corporations have found themselves the victims of many swindlers, who have alleged serious injuries at the fault of the corporations, and have sued for large sums in damages. In many cases the plaintiffs have received substantial sums for their injuries, some of which amounted to nothing and were merely a pretext for the damage proceeding.

The new Alliance keeps track of all the damage suits in which its members are defendants, and in case the plaintiff in the action has ever sued anybody before, the defense has a good case. One of the fake schemes of the professional is to turn out the light in an elevator or street car, and then feign some serious accident. Little time is lost in the filing of the suit for big damages, and in many cases the plaintiff recovers, as jurors always favor one who has been injured against a large corporation, especially if the plaintiff is a woman.

The latest fad in hairdressing, which, by the way, threatens to do away with the much favored pompadour, is the bandeaux. Nothing makes a woman look so much out of style as to have her hair dressed in an old-fashioned way, and as a result much attention has been paid to the latest methods of dressing.

The bandeaux effects are taking the place of the Greek fillets, and the shell bandeaux now sell from 20 cents to the same number of dollars. The smartest way to wear the bandeaux is across the head at the top, just back of the forehead often the exaggerated effect of flatness being produced, the hair being pushed down over the eyes and held there by the curved bands of the shell. This leaves a little curly fringe at the edge of the forehead and temples, which makes a soft line about the face.

One of the other features of the summer hair dressing is the number of curls and loose tresses left about the face in appearance. —Continued.

THE SUMMER FOOTWEAR.

The white shoes this summer are of canvas, linen and kid, and many have very high tops, while the whitelaced tie is very popular. Suede in all shades still holds its own. One of the newest novelties is a pretty little house slipper in delicate colors, with a bewitching little bow on one side. Black velvet slippers are very stylish, parent reckless abandon. These give a pretty effect. The "classic" hair dressing of the past winter has had its day and will probably never be used again by the fashionable.

A GREAT SCHEME.
