PRINCESS ZARA

BY ROSS BEECKMAN.

"You are a beautiful woman, princess, and with that aid alone you should accomplish much.'

"Yes,' she admitted, as calmly as if he had referred to a ring she wore on her hand; "but I find that to be the most unpleasant character of my employment. To use such beauty as I have, and such attractions as I possess, for the winning of men to our cause, whether they be officials or nobles, is hateful to me; and yet I do not hesitate."

"It is not a difficult task for men to join the nihilists because of love for you; I could, myself, almost forsake it, did you ask such a sacrifice."

"Shame on you!" she stormed, at him, snatching away her hand and darting out of his reach. "Shame on you for that! Those were treacherous words, and I expected them least of all, from you. You make me ashamed; ashamed for you, and for the cause I uphold. Are all men so weak, and so easily led? Does the mere beauty of a woman make cowards of them all? Could a pair of flashing eyes or the touch of soft hands, change the destinies of an empire?"

"They have done so more than once, princess."

"You make me hate myself—and you."

"I am afraid that you took me too literally," he said, with perfect composure, for although he knew that he had angered her, she was yet so beautiful in her impetuous resentment of his words that he was lost in admiration. Indeed he had uttered no more than the truth when he told her that he might even forsake the cause if such a woman as Zara could have been his reward; and he knew by long years of experience, that he uttered the sentiments of nine men out of ten who might fall under her influence.

"My mission is accomplished here," she told him, "and already my passage is engaged for the return voyage. I leave New York at once and I shall probably never return to it. What you have told me of the measures taken in our behalf, has encouraged me greatly; and yet because of one thing you have said, I dread the return to St. Petersburg."

"What was that, princess?"

"I must correct myself. You intimated it; you did not say it."

"What was it?"

"You suggested, in one statement you made, that you had reason to fear that the spy-system as arrayed against us at home, might be augmented by the addition of skilled operators and experts from this country. I had thought that we nihilists had a monopoly of that sort of employment, and that the czar and his nobles could claim only the loyalty of their own spies. But your suggestion fills me with doubt and dread. If Alexander were to introduce imported spies among our people—"

He interrupted the princess by laughing heartily.

"Again you took me too literally," he asserted. "Here and there, there may be one who will seek Russia and the czar for such employment, but it will be for the emoulment it will bring, and cannot be induced by patriotic sentiment. We would have little cause to dread such people, since we would not be long in identifying them, and ultimately I believe they would assist, rather than retard our efforts."

"Perhaps so."

"There can be no doubt of your own loyalty to our cause, princess?"

"Certainly not."

"Are the others like you? Pardon me, there can be no others like you for there could never be another so beautiful and fascinating as you are. But are there others of your acquaintance high in position, who are working for the cause as diligently as you are?"

"They are many. Their name is legion."

They parted then. He to go about his several duties among the nihilistic sympathizers who could not return to Russia without including Siberia in their itinerary, and she to stride across the room and stand for a long time facing herself in the mirror, studying the features of her own beautiful face in an effort to detect there the fascinating qualities before which all men with whom she came in contact seemed so ready to succumb.

But her eyes were cold and hard as she regarded her own reflection in the glass. There was a fire in their depths which could have attracted no man, and which would have repelled all alike, for it was threatening and sombre.

Zara de Echeveria almost hated herself at that moment. Hated the beauty which gave her such power, and which exerted the magic that made slaves of men.

The hour came when she entered a carriage again to be driven to the steamship wharf; when she stood upon the deck near the rail, and gazed as she honestly believed, over the house tops of a city she would never see again.

Fate, however, had builded differently for her, although she did not guess it; and she was going now to meet it as fast as the throbbing engines of the mechanical monster would bear her forward.

When the great bulk of the vessel swung into the current of the North river, and she turned her eyes once more toward the wharf it had left, a waving hand attracted her attention, and she recognized the tal form of Alexis Saberevski as he bade her adieu. Beside him on the pier was another figure as tal and as straight as Saberevski's, and she saw them turn away together and walk up the pier until they were lost in the crown.

She did not know, then, that the other tall figure of a man was the one into whose arms she was fleeing, even though she left him there, unknown, upon that North river wharf, while she sailed away to the other side of the world.

And he could foresee as little.

But such is Fate.

CHAPTER IV.

Dan Derrington's Story.

I had known Alexis Saberevski in St. Petersburg; I had known him again in Paris. I had, in fact, encountered him at one time or another in almost every capital of Europe, and I was therefore not greatly surpirsed when, having just left the dining table at my club in my own native city, New York, his card was given to me with the information that the gentleman was waiting in the reception room.

I had him up at once, with the courtesies of the club extended to him, and finding that he had dined, we ensconced ourselves in the depths of a pair of huge chairs which occupied one of the secluded corners of the library, each equally delighted to be again in the company of the other. We had never known each other intimately, and yet we were friends; friends after that fashion which sometimes comes between men of pronounced characteristics, and which finds its expression in the form of a silent confidence, and an undoubted pleasure in each other's company.

I knew Saberevski to be a particularly strong man. Strong in the highest and best acceptation and meaning of that word, for he was a giant in intellect and in character.

He was also a mystery, and this fact possibly rendered him all the more interesting to one whose business it had always been to solve mysteries. I do not mean by that that I had ever made any effort to delve into the secrets of Saberevski's past, or to read without his knowledge and consent, any portion of that history which he kept so carefully veiled; but the mere fact that an air of mystery did pervade his presence, imparted to him a certain fascinating quality which might not otherwise have been apparent.

I had not encountered him for several years, and our last parting had occurred in front of Brown's hotel, Picadilly, standing near the entrance from Albermarle street. As I received his card from the club servant, the words he had uttered at that hour of parting returned to me, for I had made a mental note of them, at the time regarding them as being of much more import than was nakedly expressed, coming from such a man. He had said: "I shall probably never return to St. Petersburg or pass across the border of Russia again, Derrington; but I may, and probably will some day find myself in New York; when I do, you shall know of it." That day when I received his card, the last words he had uttered to me recurred to my mind, and it was with unmixed pleasure that I presently greeted him. I knew that there had been a time when he was high in place at the court of his native city, St. Petersburg; I knew that he had been prominent in the favor of Czar Alexander, and I had no doubt that he was so still, notwithstanding the positive assertion once made by him that he would probably never pass the borders of Russia again. But this was only another phase of the mystery that surrounded him, and it belittled not at all my estimation of the man's character, and the power he could sway if he chose to do so. How deeply he was, even at that moment, in the confidence of the Russian emperor, I was one day to understand, although the moment of comprehension was many months distant from me then.

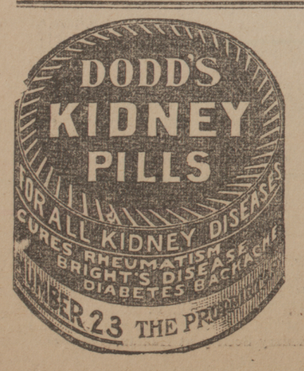

He had dined and so we had cigars served to us in that cozy corner where, with a table which held a box of them, together with some liquid refreshments and other conveniences, we settled ourselves for an uninterrupted chat.

"It is good to see you, old chap," he told me in his frank and hearty way; "good to be with you again to feel the clasp of your hand and to hear your hearty laugh. I have been thinking about you considerably of late, and this morning when I found that my wandering life had dropped me down in your city, I determined to look you up at once. In my baggage I found your card which contained this club address; and here I am." His big, hearty, infectious laugh rang through the room.

There was no need to tell him of my own delight in his presence. My manner of greeting him had demonstrated that without any question of doubt. Presently he asked me:

"What is your particular avocation just now, Derrington? Are you still at the old game?"

TOD BREWER MISSING AND MAY BE DROWNED

St. Mary's Young Man's Clothes Found on Raft in River—Local Government Met Yesterday.

Fredericton, N. B., June 1—The local government met this afternoon and transacted considerable business, but so far as can be learned there was nothing of a very important nature taken up. There are about eighty items on the schedule and it is doubtful if the government will be able to get through with the list tomorrow. A meeting of the board of education is called for tomorrow afternoon.

The marriage of J. A. McKenzie, employed as resident engineer of the Transcontinental railway near Winnipeg, and Miss Kelsie Ross, daughter of Malcolm Ross, of this city, will be solemnized on June 9. The prospective bridegroom is a native of Cape Breton.

Quite a sensation was created at St. Mary's this afternoon by the report that Tod C. Brewer, son of Albert Brewer, the well known bridge constructor, had mysteriously disappeared. The family lately removed from Woodstock to St. Mary's, and Tod arrived from that place on Saturday evening. He was around the village on Monday, and some persons, who saw him, declare that he was acting rather strangely. He disappeared some time during last night, and this afternoon his coat and hat were found on a raft of logs near St. Mary's shore of the river just below Babbitt's mill. This created the impression that he had made way with himself by drowning. Men immediately set to work and grappled the river in the vicinity of the raft, but were unable to locate the body. Papers bearing his name were found in the pockets of the coat, and there is no doubt but that it belongs to him. While it is known that Brewer has been in delicate health for some time, his friends are loath to believe that he would take his own life, and are hoping that he will turn up all right.

New members were elected as follows: Regular, Howard B. Robinson and Dr. F. M. Wetmore; associate, Mrs. Stanley Elkin; junior, J. Marr; junior associate, Miss Janet Freeze, Miss Marion McKendrick and Miss Mary Brown.

The library was enriched by a large number of exchanges from scientific societies and the museum received silurian shells from Stanley Thompson; microscope slide holders and centerer, from W. H. Mowatt; African leaves, from Albert H. Gillan; aerial roots of a tree fern, from Donald McIntosh; rocks from Hampton and specimen of psilophyton, a rare fossil, from A. Gordon Leavitt.

The report of W. J. Wilson, the society's delegate to the Royal Society, was read by Mr. McIntosh and a general outline of the work done by the Royal Society was given by Dr. Geo. F. Matthew.

The matter of arranging for the field meeting of the society for the summer was left to a committee of which W. F. Burditt is chairman, and there is no doubt but that this year's outings will be equal to those of the past in providing both entertainment and instruction.

PAST YEAR WAS THE BEST IN MOUNT ALLISON'S HISTORY

Convocation Day Yesterday—The Graduates and Prize Winners—Degrees Conferred—Alumni Society to Raise Fund for Chair of Economics.

Sackville, N. B., June 1—The Mount Allison University convocation exercises were held in Lingley Hall tonight, the attendance being unusually large. The programme opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Rogers, of Sussex, after which Dr. Allison, president of the university, spoke of the past year as being a record one both in point of attendance and in amount of faithful work accomplished. This convocation, he said, would be the last held in old Lingley, as the building was to be torn down and next year it was expected that the Fawcett assembly hall would be ready.

W. H. Davidson, '07, sang a solo very acceptably.

The valedictory address by Ivan C. Rand, was an exceptionally able one. It was well delivered and elicited many favorable comments.

Mr. Rand said in part:

"The members of the graduating class are presumed to have acquired to some extent an education. By this we are not to understand that they have charged their memories with a mass of disconnected facts, but rather, that they have undergone a mental discipline, a weaving of facts and principles into the texture of their minds that will gender these minds active and vigorous and capable of original application.

"We have enjoyed privileges. We are now going to enter into new associations. What should be our attitude towards those with whom we shall have relations, and who, perhaps, have not been so fortunate in some respects as we have been. We can answer this question better when we determine what the end of this education is. What the end of this education is a momentous question. But what can that end be if it is not that we may thereby realize our own powers to become better acquainted with the influences around us that contribute to human happiness. What can its object be if it is not to make our own life and the life of our fellows calmer and clearer. Its whole value must be measured by the degree to which it is capable of being worked up into the general life of which we all partake. In view of this, therefore, shall we after this education indulge a vaunting pride and self conceit in this fancied superior attainment. There is no more pitable spectacle than that of the so called educated person who looks contemptuously on any of his fellows because of some lack of particular knowledge on their part. Such a person has missed the greatest thing of all education, a glimpse at that infinitude of knowledge before which we all must bow humbly and reverently. Let us all remember that the wisest man of Athens, after a life of earnest inquiry summed up his experience in the confession that all he knew was that he knew nothing.

"There is one thing, however, that we can demand of all people and that is that they be themselves. If we are ourselves we will be honest. Honesty is the basis of the whole social structure. We must not only think, but we must think honestly and fearlessly. We are all indued with mental powers, and must we sit like children and be fed all our lives? Are we to set before us as an ideal the life of a parasite?

"We must respect others, their thoughts and opinions. The treatment we expect to them we must extend to them. Above all in our social relations there should be avoided that smartness to which we are inclined. And there should be reduced to a minium those performances which we call practical jokes. The college graduate who can take pleasure in the discomfort of another has either very blurred instinct, or none whatever.

"We must remember that underlying everything is the fact that we are concerned with only one thing here—our living. Things are of value only as they may be worked into our living. The only principles that should have any place are working principles. Nothing should be rejected that contributes to our better living. But those principles must be made part of us. We must be them.

"Class mates, our relations during four years have been pleasant. Now our associations are to cease; but impressions gained in college days will remain. What we have really given others will never fade, will never die. The honesty, the dignity, and the curtesy, the flush of modesty, the purity of thought, these are characteristics that are not the exclusive property of the professor. To these, and such as these let us pay homage. They are the best things in the world. As we go out let us take as a working principle, do the duty lying nearest you and let it be done honestly and thoroughly. If we do this perhaps our living here will not be altogether in vain."

After a few words addressed to the faculty and the under graduates Mr. Rand closed with these words: "We leave Mount Allison, which we have learned to cherish and which we shall always cherish, each to his own task."

Degrees were conferred on the following:

MANY DON'T KNOW

HEART AFFECTED.

More People than Aware of It Have Heart Disease.

"If examinations were made of everyone, people would be surprised at the number of persons walking about suffering from heart disease."

This startling statement was made by a doctor at a recent inquest. "I should not like to say that heart disease is as common as this would imply," said the expert, "but I am sure that the number of persons going about with weak hearts must be very large."

"Hundreds of people go about their daily work on the verge of death, and yet do not know it. It is only when the shock comes that kills them that the unsuspected weakness of the heart is made apparent."

"But undoubtedly heart weakness, not disease, is more prevalent nowadays. I should think that the stress of living, the wear and rush of modern business life, have a lot to do with heart trouble."

There is no doubt but that this is correct, and we would strongly advise any one suffering in any way from heart trouble to try a course of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Price 50 cts. per box or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or will be mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

FLUTTERING OF THE HEART.

Mrs. G. M. White, Williamstown, N.B., writes: "I was troubled with weak spells and fluttering of the heart. I was so bad I could scarcely lie down in bed. I procured a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and they helped me so much I got another box and it has made a final cure. I cannot speak too highly of them. I think they are worth their weight in gold."

FERRY COMMITTEE ADOPTS SOME NEW REGULATIONS

In Future Ferry Fares Must Be Placed in Boxes Provided for the Purpose—Some Discussion Over S. H. Mayes' Pile Driving Contract.

At a meeting of the ferry committee yesterday afternoon it was decided to recommend to the council that in future boxes should be provided and that passengers be required to deposit their fares in these boxes before going through the turnstiles. The gatemen will also have boxes for the collection of fares from teamsters, and the mates of the boats will keep account of the single and double teams carried on each trip.

Those present, besides the chairman, Ald. Potts, were Superintendent Glasgow, City Engineer Murdoch, the common clerk and Ald. Wilson, Holder and Scully.

The report of a sub-committee appointed to inquire into matters connected with the service, was first received. They recommended that eight boxes be procured for the fares of passengers, and four boxes for the gatemen. They also recommended that no changes be made in the pay of the ferry employes at present. The report was adopted without discussion.

It is proposed to have the boxes at the collectors' windows near the turnstiles. The collectors will still be kept on duty and will see that proper fares are placed in the boxes and will supply change when asked.

Superintendent Glasgow said he wanted spruce deals for the repairs of the floats, and he and the chairman were authorized to purchase them. It was also decided to call for tenders for the supply of coal for the stoves in the toll houses.

A discussion then arose between the chairman and the superintendent over the missing of trips by the ferry boat. Ald. Potts wanted to know the reason for this. Mr. Glasgow blamed it on the freshet, and then the chairman wished to know why the public were not informed as to the cause of delay at such times.

The superintendent said that when he was around, and was asked, he had no hesitation in telling, but he remarked that so keen was the sense of discipline among the crew of the ferry that they were non communicative. Indeed, he said, the discipline was the same on that point as on a war ship.

The chairman—"That is something new in the service isn't it, to have a crew with such fine discipline?"

Another matter which received some attention was S. H. Mayes' contract for repairing the piling in the approaches to the ferry.

Some one asked what rate of remuneration Mr. Mayes was receiving, and the superintendent said he understood it was $14.50 a day. The pile driver had been on the job six weeks and had been idle three or four days. He said, however, he was not quite clear on the matter and volunteered to get the bills.

When he had left the room in search of the documents, the chairman remarked that in his opinion the ferry staff was at least as well paid now as any in the service of the city. They worked seventeen hours out of the day, while the police and firemen are on duty the whole twenty-four.

At this point Mr. Glasgow returned and laid Mr. Mayes' bills on the table. When footed up by the common clerk they totalled $466. As the superintendent said forty-five pieces of piling had been driven it was figured out that the cost to the city

In answer to Ald. Wilson the superintendent said that some years ago a tender had been received for driving piling at $4.75. He understood that the present contract had been made by Engineer Peters, under an order from the council.

Engineer Peters was called to the committee room to explain the matter, and said he had spoken to the pile drivers and as none of them would take a contract the work had to be done by days work. Mr. Mayes' charge was $13 for the pile driver with three men, but he could engage extra men at the discretion of the engineer in charge of the work.

The next question asked by the board, was as to how long this job was likely to last.

Engineer Peters said it was for Superintendent Glasgow to say, but he repudiated any responsibility.

City Engineer Murdoch solved the problem by saying that he would see about the matter today, and if the work was all done Mr. Mayes' job would terminate.

The committee passed an order that in future all the passengers on the ferry boat must be allowed to land before the teams.
